

America. To Mr. Bourne, belonging to the navy, who came passenger in the Henry, we are indebted for the following account of the progress of the revolution in Spain.

"Enclosed are the four leading proclamations of Quiroga, commanding the constitutionalists, and a note from an intelligent friend of mine at Gibraltar, communicating the principal facts of the revolutionists' success.

"We left in the morning of the 6th ult. The constitutionalists had possession at that time of Algeiras and St. Roque, and were advancing on Malaga. They shed no blood and had used no violence. They were welcomed everywhere by the people, and expected impatiently at the large cities along the coast. I saw O'Donnell in Gibraltar the afternoon of the 5th. Instead of retiring upon Madrid, or into the interior, he had established his headquarters about half way between St. Roque and the Rock. He had few troops, and they were dwindling fast by desertion.

"I was whispered even that butcher of Valencia was coming at the success of the constitutionalists, by way of saving his own head. A letter from a gentleman who had just arrived on the frontier of France, after traveling through Spain from Gibraltar, represents the whole people as constitutional.

"The revolutionary troops were in fine order, well clad, and well fed, and well paid: every thing they received was paid for. Not a soldier had been billeted on an individual, without his consent."

The following is the letter spoken of above, addressed to Mr. Bourne, while at Gibraltar.

Mr. Bourne—The four proclamations of Gen. Quiroga herewith sent, will give a pretty accurate history of the revolution which has broken out in Andalusia, and threatens to extend through the whole kingdom of Spain.

The revolt was at Arcos, on the 2d inst. by the army under the command of Count Cañadon, who was to command it against Buenos Ayres. The count was arrested and imprisoned—the army placed under the command of Quiroga, who immediately, without opposition, marched through Port St. Marys to Chiclana, and thence to the Isle of Leon, proclaiming the constitution in all places, in which he was heartily joined by the people.

In Leon, he possessed himself of the town of San Fernando and Isla, where he captured all the stores collected there for the grand expedition; then captured the arsenal of Caracas, a ship of the line & other vessels stationed there, with a number of navy officers, who were imprisoned. Thus commanding all the strong holds around, and completely master of the bay of Cadiz, he was to go against that city with all his force, at night, on the 28th inst. and it was believed there would be no opposition. He was supplied with every thing and computed, on the 28th, our latest accounts, to have 21,000 men."

PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE, COMMUNICATED FOR THE NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER.

"Gibraltar, 25th Jan. 1820.

"A dispatch boat arrived here last night from Cadiz, stating that the force of the Revolutionists at the Isla, or San Fernando, about eight miles from Cadiz, had increased their numbers materially, and that an attack upon that city was hourly contemplated. The Revolutionists have taken possession of the arsenal, containing all the stores for the expedition to South America, and they have also part of the fleet in their power. There appears now but one opinion here as to the result of the undertaking, and that in a few days they will have proceeded so far as to render further exertions on the part of Ferdinand useless. Accounts now from all parts of Spain, speaking of revolts and open declarations against the present government, confirm the belief that was first entertained; that the attempt was to be general; but, owing to some movement of troops (unexpected) it broke out near Cadiz rather prematurely.

"Sir John Donney, commandant at Seville, writes here that he does not believe the discontented troops near Cadiz exceed 8000, but that they are effective. Some say 15,000; at any rate, thus far all the troops that have been marched against them have joined in the enterprise. There seems but little doubt now but that there is an understanding between the commander at Cadiz and the Revolutionists, and that when the attack is made the city will immediately open its gates and receive them. The man who has thus far signed the proclamations, &c on the part of the Revolutionists, is a Colonel Antonio Quiroga; but it is said that a Count O'Reilly is at the head of the whole. He was implicated in the last, and is said to be a man possessing a proper capacity to conduct the whole.

"I have only time to add that the vessel by which I write sails immediately, which must account for my haste."

Baltimore March 14.

The fast sailing ship Stephiana, captain Burke, arrived at New-York on Saturday evening, in 25 days from Havre bringing letters to the 9th and papers to the 8th of the month. It was rumored that the Insurgent troops of Spain had marched to Madrid: that the guards of the king had turned against him and that he was assassinated or had died. It was also reported that Cadiz held out on the 24th of January, another account says that Cadiz surrendered on the 22nd.

100 Dollars Reward. RANAWAY from the subscriber on the 27th February, near Middletown, Jefferson county, Ky. a dark mulatto lad named FRANK, about 20 years old, 5 feet 8 or 9 inches high, straight and slender made, small beard, full mouth, upper fore teeth considerably decayed, hair generally neatly combed, down look, and when spoken to, replies slowly and somewhat surley; he chews tobacco.

He had on when he left me, a fashionable fur hat about half worn, an old blue broad-cloth coat, the cuffs bound with velvet, striped waistcoat, white shirt, white country cloth pantaloons, white socks, and a pair of coarse shoes. It is probable he will change his name and clothes. I will give the above reward if he is lodged in any jail in the United States, so that I get him, or the reward with traveling expenses if delivered to me.
