

time and repeated examples of that policy which has not for its object increase of territory or interested treaties, but the consolidation of the principles of justice, and the foundations of society, threatened with universal dissolution.

Spaniards! Europe renders justice to your loyalty; it knows that it is one of the virtues which most ennoble your character; it is far from founding your generous sentiments with those attributed to you by the friends of revolution, in order to cover, with the name of the general opinion of the nation, the excesses and crimes of a faction.

The moment is come, when, free from the oppression which weighed upon you, you are able to show to Europe, how just and merited was the opinion which she had formed of your sentiments; let us not leave to our armies & to those of our allies, the glory of our deliverance—the whole nation is interested in sharing in the great success; but never let the energetic expression of its will be sullied by any one of those excesses at which honor and generosity revolt.

Spaniards! your provisional government declares that it does not recognize, and that it considers as never having existed, the political and administrative acts of the government erected by rebellion, & that it establishes therefore, provisionally that administration of the state which existed before the violence of anarchy in 1820. The edifice of anarchy thus destroyed, and the king, our master, restored to liberty, then the institutions may be established which circumstances advise and require, and which his majesty may deign to grant.

The provisional Junta of the government of the Spanish nation recognizes only in the king the origin and seat of the sovereign authority, and, as a necessary consequence, does not admit in the political system any modification which is not made directly by the king, by the advice of those wise men whom he may be pleased to consult.

Spaniards, the experiment which you have made, ought to awaken all your vigilance, and to put you on your guard against the insidious and deceitful suggestions of revolution.

Our king, always disposed to secure the happiness of his people will find, no doubt, in our ancient laws, in our usages & customs, wise provisions, which, combined with our character, and in harmony with our manners and our wants, will fix in a stable and advantageous manner, our future destiny.

Spaniards, it is for you the glory is reserved of exterminating the revolutionary hydra which, repulsed from all the states of Europe, has come, in seeking an asylum, to strike our native land with sterility & calamity. Let the most perfect harmony be the advice of our noble cause; let there be only one will where there is only one wish and one interest—the safety of religion, of our king, and of our country. By the provisional Junta.
