

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE, EXTRAORDINARY
From the New Turf Register.

On the 2nd inst. was run the last heat of the famous race between Henry Clay's grey Mare, "American System," and J. C. Calhoun's black Filly, "Nullification." The racers kept so close during the whole heat that they might have been contained within the hem of a lady's garment. The Jockeys did their best, using whip and spur all the time, and putting their cattle to their utmost speed. Great betting on American System—she being backed by all the Yankees on the course. But the backers were all taken aback, when the winners arrived at the winning post at the same instant, so that the Judges could not say which was foremost—bets of course drawn—racers both fell at the same time, Nullification stone dead, and American System so near it that she had to be removed and taken off the course in a broken down condition—Nullification given to the dogs without even stripping her of the skin.

American System was quite confident—and that she did not win the race astonished even the knowing ones. But as there are reasons for all things, on this occasion they were "as plenty as blackberries"—all the world knows that the owner of American System is a hard rider, and ever since he became her proprietor she has had heavy weights to carry, and has frequently had to run over courses both heavy and hilly. At the meeting of 1824 she was distanced, and was thrown out of the Calendar, but was restored to it by the Jockey Club in 1825. In 1828 she started against the noted horse Old Hickory, but being heavily ridden by a rider dressed in a jockey cap, nankeen trowsers, and pumps, she lost the race, and the Hickory broom was triumphant, and she sent to grass, and laid by for further operation. In 1832 she was again brought forth, after long feeding, and much preparation, and was started once more against her old antagonist, Old Hickory—to be ridden this time by her owner; and here it is supposed she had her wind touched—for though she carried extra weight, no mercy was shown her, and she was ridden almost to death. From this circumstance there were doubts about bringing her out so soon after—but when the extreme youth of her opponent was taken into consideration, as well as the heavy weight to be carried by the filly, it was expected American System, broken winded as she was, would win the stakes. But as the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong—and she has to retire from the course, never again to be mounted as a political hobby, or ridden by any above the degree of a mere mueller, or a tender of fences.

The knowing ones are of opinion that Clay, in this race, has been at some of his old tricks, that he has been playing know, as there were several midnight conferences observed between him and the rider of Nullification. The latter was so extremely young, so little accustomed to the course, and being so heavily ridden, it was expected she would be distanced, or at least would bolt—but the owner of American System had with his own hands given her a bolus, which is well known to have brought her nearly to death's door, and which the other jockeys do not hesitate to say, was done for the purpose of giving Nullification a chance to win the race.

That the death of Nullification, in this race, was brought on by the hard riding of her jockey there can be no doubt—"Notch or nothing," was his motto from the start, and therefore whip or spur was not spared during the whole heat—which will account for her epitaph to be written, commencing "He Jactet Nullification."

The owner of American System expresses some hopes of her recovery, and that she will again become an efficient hobby—but in this he is not joined by his jockeys—they have given up all such hopes. One of them, Tristram, of R. L. has been heard to say, he would as soon bet upon a Jack ass as on any future day as upon any horse, mare, or gelding, raised or ridden by H. Clay. Not he'll never again bet on a "scrivener," owned by any such bootsy player—he shall never have another opportunity of "running the buck" upon him.

There was so much betting and coining between Clay and Webster just before the race, that Tristram has taken up the notion that Daniel too has been concerned in the plot—he is therefore determined to denounce him in Prae Hall the first opportunity.

It is understood that J. Q. Adams fully intended to enter his two fillies, "Buck Report," and "Dermot MacMaurough" for the race—but on his jockey entering the mews to prepare them for the race, he found Bank Report dead lame, and poor Dermot seriously wind galled.

Nullification had no sooner given the last kick than his owner started an express for S. Carolina, in order to warn his jockeys there against betting, and to make arrangements for returning the arms and ammunition purchased before the bills given for them come to maturity—and to advise that if those from whom they were purchased refuse to take them back in payment, they may be sold for the benefit of the Underwriters.

In a leading Editorial article, the Richmond Whig, of the 8th instant, expresses the following sentiment:

"What man who really enjoys liberty

—who has a passion for that inestimable blessing—does not feel his sense of its enjoyment lessened, his very breathing oppressed, at the idea that we are hopelessly and eternally tied to the Union?"

This is from the joint organ of Messrs. Clay and Calhoun—the incendiary print through which they hope to rally a party in Virginia, in favor of secession, and to rouse sectional feeling to a pitch which will give the command of the southern vote, in the next Presidential election, to those intriguing confederates, who have now clubbed their desperate fortunes in a new enterprise. They are ready to sacrifice the principle upon which the permanency of our institutions depends, to create a sectional excitement, and to profit by the chances which it may give of success in their selfish schemes of personal ambition.

REV. E. K. AVERY.

We learn from the New Port Mercury of Thursday last, that on that morning the Grand Jury returned a bill of indictment against the Rev. E. K. Avery, for the murder of Sarah M. Cornell. A correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser writes: "The prisoner was bro't into court—the indictment read to him, and on the clerk's putting the question—'Are you guilty or not?' he replied firmly, 'Not guilty.' The deportment of Mr. A. whilst in court was firm and manly; not the least weakness nor emotion was perceptible; and the impression seems to have been generally produced, that he is either an innocent man, or that, innocent or guilty, he possesses a degree of fortitude and self-control, which few can boast of. The counsel for the prisoner having intimated that a week at least would be consumed in the trial, the court observed that there was no time at their disposal when the trial could take place sooner than the first Monday in May next, and that they would cheerfully assign an earlier period for that purpose, if their public duties and engagements elsewhere would permit."

PRODIGIOUS.

A sheep which has travelled over nearly all Europe, and been exhibited in nearly all the principal cities, is now the lion of the day of England. The reported size, &c. of this animal, is almost incredible, but the authority is indisputable.—The sheep was yeated in Switzerland, and is now three years old; stands five feet high, is seven in length, and weighs four hundred and two pounds; it has produced annually thirty five pounds of wool. If the "critic" lives, the proprietor proposes to exhibition on this side of the herring pond.
