

Western Territory, and the region upon Lake Superior and the head of the Mississippi, to be furnished with useful domestic animals and implements of husbandry, and with goods, as he shall think proper. Provided, That the whole amount of such presents shall not exceed the sum of five thousand dollars.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause such rations as he shall judge proper, and as can be spared from the army provisions, without injury to the service, to be issued, under such regulations as he shall think fit to establish, to Indians who may visit the military posts or agencies of the United States on the frontiers, or in their respective nations, and a special account of these issues shall be kept and rendered.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may think fit, for carrying into effect the various provisions of this act, and of any other act relating to Indian affairs, and for the settlement of the accounts of the Indian Department.

Sec. 18. And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts, contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

APPROVED, June 30th, 1834.

RECEPTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

On yesterday morning, according to previous arrangement, the Executive Committee, consisting of fifty gentlemen, repaired on horseback at 9 o'clock to the residence of Col. Charles I. Love, two miles from town on the road towards the Hermitage, where, by previous appointment they were to meet the President for the purpose of escorting him to the city. After an introduction, and partaking of Col. Love's liberal hospitality, a procession was formed and proceeded to the City along the Murfreesborough turnpike. The city was entered by Market Street, amidst the firing of minute guns, the ringing of bells, and the joyful plaudits and acclamations of assembled thousands. As the procession swept across the public square, the sudden burst of music from an excellent band stationed in front of the Court House, operating upon the triumphant glow of generous feeling which filled every bosom in the vast crowd,

"Too joyous for suppression," had the most grand and pleasing effect. Before the band ceased playing, an open way was formed with the utmost good order, and the President alighted from his carriage at the door of the Nashville Inn, and was conducted to his apartments, amidst the spontaneous cheers and acclamations of a large concourse of citizens formed in front of the establishment. So imposing a moral spectacle was never before witnessed in this good city. Such order in action, and such universal harmony of purpose, we have never seen manifested on any occasion, since the times when our citizens used to assemble, twenty years ago, for the purpose of commemorating the glorious victories of the late war.

Soon after his arrival the President was waited upon by a Committee, consisting of the venerable Mr. Walton and Governor Blount, for the purpose of conducting him to the Hall of the convention then in session. At eleven, accompanied by the Committee, he entered the crowded Hall. As soon as the President had approached within the bar of the House, the President of the Convention, Gen. Carter, came down from the Chair, and addressed him as follows:

The Assembly before which you stand, representing the People of the State of Tennessee in their highest political attitude, rise, sir, to receive you within the Hall of their sitting, and in behalf of themselves and their constituents, to express their undiminished confidence in your patriotism, and their profound respect for your public and private character.

It has been your lot, sir, first at the head of an army, and subsequently as Chief Magistrate of the Nation, to be engaged in service, more arduous and critical, than has fallen to the duty of any citizen save one, since the auspicious act of Confederation and Independence. Alike vigorous, decisive, honest and patriotic, in the Cabinet as in the Camp, it is your good fortune to have achieved a name commensurate with the existence of the Republic, and dear to a large majority of its citizens. That you may long live in the enjoyment of this enviable distinction, participating in the blessings of the government which you fought for in youth and so nobly sustained in a late hour of peril, is, sir, the ardent hope of this assembly, and of the multitude who crowd around you.

In reviewing the many and important events which have given renown to your career, we will not so offend against your own convictions of the fallibility of all human wisdom as to say, that you have not possibly erred in administering the many high and solemn functions, that have been submitted to your care by a confiding country; that you have not done so (if at all from impure motives,) is a declaration due to the acknowledged patriotism, that guides and directs your course in life, and though the bitterness of party may endeavor to detract from your merits and impeach your motives, the deliberate judgment of another generation, uninfluenced by the feelings of those who differ from and condemn you, will enroll your name with the long list of patriots, consecrated to fame and to the veneration of posterity.

In the mixed multitude before you and around you, you can readily distinguish the companions and associates of your early life—men who have stood forth at your side, in the past hours of your perils and your triumphs, and their children who have grown up into life beneath your own eyes and observation—with one heart they now meet you, and tender the homage of affection, confidence and regard.

To which the President made the following reply:

Sir:—I receive the greeting which you have been pleased to tender me on this occasion, with feelings too strongly excited, by the imposing character of the body in whose behalf it is offered and by the various associations which it recalls to my mind, to enable me, I fear, to make an adequate acknowledgement.

I meet you, sir, and the august body over which you preside, as the representatives of the people whose partiality and confidence, far exceeding my claims, first brought me into public notice, and who have, since, in every vicissitude of fortune, uniformly sustained me with an ardor of friendship and generosity of fellow feeling that never can be requited. To you and to them let me say, that in no situation in which I have ever been placed, have I lost sight of the responsibility which was due to them. I have ever been mindful that it was on the faith of their character that mine rested, in a great degree, to do whatever good or evil was to be the result of my labors in the service of our common country. When assured then, by you, that these labors, notwithstanding the defect of judgment which they doubtless too often manifest, are yet worthy of the public approbation, I feel that I have been fortunate, and that the reward as well as the stewardship which was too generously conferred, is disproportionate to my merit.

Allow me, gentlemen, to express the hope, that your acts in the Convention may be crowned with success, and that, in all time to come, the free people of Tennessee, whilst enjoying the prosperity and happiness which are the reward of wise and equal laws and a steady and virtuous administration of them, may remember each and all of you as their benefactors.

The President was then conducted to a seat prepared for his use, where he received the individual congratulations of the Members, and of several Clergymen, Members of Congress, and other distinguished individuals who had been previously invited to seats within the bar. The whole scene had nothing of the heartlessness of political ceremony in it. It was truly what it purported to be—a meeting of friends in which the best feelings of the heart are freely permitted to manifest themselves in the unrestrained reciprocation of mutual civilities. The Convention adjourned before 12, and in a body waited on the President to his lodgings.

Before one o'clock, a procession was formed on the Public Square, in the order previously announced by the Committee of arrangements, composed of more than a thousand citizens, and at the hour appointed moved with great regularity, accompanied by an excellent band of music, to Vauxhall Garden. Here the company sat down in succession to the number of fifteen hundred persons, to a sumptuous dinner prepared for the occasion by Mr. Decker the proprietor of the establishment. The dinner was set on parallel tables ranged in a fine grove of shade trees, and extended nearly across the area of Mr. Decker's beautiful grounds. Dr. Samuel Hays presided, assisted by Gen. G. W. Gibbs, Dr. F. Robertson, Dr. J. Overton, and J. Nichol, H. R. W. Hill, G. Woods, Esqs. as Vice Presidents.

Never did a day or the ceremonies of a day go off better. It was no political celebration for party purposes; therefore, no regular set of toasts had been prepared or were given. Mr. Vice President Hill, proposed the health of the President of the United States, which was drank by the company in a bumper. A sentiment from the President being called for, he gave.

The true constitutional currency, gold and silver coin.—It can cover and protect the labor of our country without the aid of a National Bank, an institution which can never be otherwise than hostile to the liberties of the people, because its tendency is to associate wealth with an undue power over the public interests.

This toast, on being announced by the President of the day, was drank and cheered by the company with long and continued shouts of applause.

The President retired at an early hour, after which the company retired. The greatest harmony and good feeling prevailed, and the entire proceedings of the day were marked by one accident or unpleasant occurrence.

A TROUGH STORY.

"Gentleman," said a man who had been travelling west, to a motley company in the sitting-room of a tavern, "it would do your hearts good to see the game in the western country. Why, a man needn't trouble himself about his dinner; if he finds that he is short of provisions, all he has got to do is to load his gun and fire it out at the window of his house and he is sure to give a quietus to something of the eatable order. It is a splendid sight to behold a stag bounding through the woods with antlers six feet apart at the tips—all you've got to do is to level at him, and he's a case. Though, in fact there's some little trouble attending these hunting excursions for the woods and brambles, are so thick that the thunderbolt don't know where to strike, and a man may have his flesh pretty considerably torn."

"Humph!" exclaimed a listener, "that's no go; how in the name of common sense could a stag with antlers six feet apart at the tips, run through such woods?"

"I say, stranger," replied the narrator, rather stumped by this interrogatory; "you're as big a fool as I've met with for many a day. While I was at the West, I'd business enough of my own to attend to without enquiring into the manner in which stags run through the woods—they did it and that's enough." [Baltimore Visitor.]

Good news for Poets and Paragraphists.—The Gentleman's Magazine of Fashion for the present month says—"the height of fashion is a shabby dress; and the more threadbare a man's coat is, the more fashionable it is considered."

A CARD.

To the Voters of Knox County.
G RATEFUL for the expression of confidence manifested towards me, by the vote of Monday the 4th inst. I have thought proper to adopt this plan of returning you my sincere thanks; also (through the advice of some of my friends,) to inform my fellow citizens that, I shall be a candidate for the office of Sheriff at the expiration of the present incumbents term of service.

With due respect, your ob't. serv't.
