DAILY SENTINEL

From the Boston Traveller. "Home to Thanksgiving." Every institution has been... and as heartily accepted. Even the letter to Uncle Sam, in Boston, had not been rejected, though its composition and typography had cost poor Martha more trouble and anxiety than all the other preparations, and no notice had been taken of it by the grand relation to whom it had gone. The little arrangements, like the wedding, and the christening, had been kept a secret by the older members of the family. Grandmother had not heard a breath of it, though she expressed a little surprise when Bessie's best white dress and christening blanket were placed before the first air.

Since the breakfast of that morning, Edward had not been seen. His mother missed him, and his father needed him, a hundred times; but he was nowhere to be found; and just as they were becoming quite impatient at his delay, there was a soft tap at the back door, which Martha's listening ear immediately caught. It made a good deal of commotion, for it was much earlier than any of the visitors were expected, and the holiday dresses were not yet put on; but quickly smoothing her already smooth hair, Martha opened the door.

There stood Edward. His cap was thrown back, exposing to full view the happiest, reddest face he had ever seen, though she had ever seen; and handsome, truly, but for his fine features were lighted with that greatest of all beautifiers—a happy consciousness of having succeeded in an attempt to make others happy. Upon his arm he carried a large basket; it was a very large one, and he stooped over as if he lifted it with difficulty.

No one spoke; so marching into the middle of the floor, he put his basket down upon the table, and said, "Good-morning grandmother! a happy Thanksgiving to you! And good-morning, Mr. and Mrs. Norton! I have just received a very large turkey, and I fear you might not have dinner enough for such a hungry boy as I am. I have brought a twelve pound turkey with me?" So saying, he untied the paper from that part of the basket through which he had kept the "drumsticks," with great difficulty, from protruding into sight, and drew forth as fat and as fine a turkey as ever lived, from grove to grace a Thanksgiving table.

"Well, good Eddy," said his father. "So that is the reason why you thought our goose would do as well as a turkey, was it? I, for one, never suspected it."

PIGS AND CHERRIES.—That inveterate joker, The Journal of Commerce, is responsible for the following story: On Thanksgiving afternoon we went to see an old German, Uncle S., who lived on Long Island, on his farm near Brooklyn. Mr. S. is from Germany, and has been for some years a strong Temperance man, although brought up with an ardent appreciation of the virtues of grape juice.

"Uncle," said we, as we drew a tankard of cider while partaking of his bountiful table, "how came you to relinquish the use of wine?"

"Well," responded the hale old gentleman, unbuttoning his vest to make room for the third plate of turkey to which he had helped himself, "I tell you den. When I first comes from Jarmany, we moved to Lancaster county, in Pennsylvania, and dere was a cherry house, so every year we make a barrel of cherry bounce, and we all get drunk on it regular every Saturday evening. Next spring, when der bounce was all drunk up, I goes for cherries to der dogs. Der consequence was der dogs gits shoost so drunk as a lot of beeps.

"By and by, hogs gets sober again, and I tries 'em mit another mess. Der hogs was very hungry, and come runnin' up to der trough, squealin like der tyfel; den dey sthick in der shouders, and smack der chops till dey got a taste of der cherries; and den dey all run round der yard mit der tongues wide open, and der months hanging out, and rub der ground agin der noses to take away der taste. Hogs couldnt stand it, no how—me der old friskick."

"Old dad said, 'neffer geef it up der way,' so, next weeks I geefs der hogs another mess of der cherries, and when I comes mit der bucket to feed 'em right away dey see something wrong. Up dey all walks slowly to der feed; and, when dey smell der cherries, all turned right round mit der hind quarters to der trough!"

"Ever since dat time, mine pop, when der prandy subject comes up, I sashortright about face, and lins nothing to der mit der subject."

We felt as though we had heard an impressive temperance lecture, and congratulated ourselves that Uncle S. had strengthened the conviction that temperance is better than indulgence.

How our Country...

of New York City, several times were read from the speaker...

The speech of this gentleman, although commendatory of the course of the Administration...

in its removal of Bronson, was yet respectfully respectful toward the President...

and presents a strong contrast to the tissue of mischievous slanders...

in the speech of Gen. Wallace, he has shown that while differing from the President...

he can treat him as one gentleman should treat another. We submit a brief extract as illustrative of this fact...

The sentiments it contains evince the possession by its author of a noble heart...

and a breeding of a high-toned and honorable man.

A distinguished soldier, who had borne the military glory of his country to the highest summit of martial renown...

was opposed by a no less eminent fellow citizen, the present distinguished chief Magistrate of the United States...

That contest was marked by one of the most triumphant victories ever recorded in political annals...

in favor of General Franklin Pierce. His long and thorough identification with the great principles of the Democratic party...

his strict construction of the constitution—the manner in which he had always guarded the rights of the States...

his acknowledged patriotism, above all that noblest of human virtues, his tried fidelity, and the lofty and devoted course that marked his deportment...

from the nomination to the election, were guarantees for the future, and his triumph was hailed with acclamations of praise, and diffused life, joy, and gladness throughout the boundaries of the republic...

On the 23d of December, A. D. 1852, Franklin Pierce, the candidate of the National Democracy, stood before the world the happiest and most exalted of men...

invested by a great and magnanimous people with their confidence and power. Nor had he reached that commanding eminence by any unworthy arts...

He had through life preferred the quiet of his domestic fireside, and shrank from public honors, and only suffered his name to be employed when it could heal our dissensions, and unite the Democracy against the common foe...

But solemn and mysterious are the ways of Providence. It was not designed by Heaven that one man should concentrate in his own person so much happiness and power...

A nation's cherished hopes rested upon Franklin Pierce—his hopes were centered in his son. While the distant hills were reverberating with notes of gladness at the Democratic triumph...

and his success, the bells of Concord were solemnly tolling the domestic bereavement that rested upon his home. His heart was broken, and his boy was dead...

Melancholy, indeed, must have been the emotions under which the President proceeded to Washington to meet the people's representatives...

and fill the exalted office which he had never sought. No sooner had his administration been formed than that eminent citizen, who had won on the floor of the Senate the proud distinction of the American Cato—the Vice President—while the oath of office was still fresh upon his lips...

was also summoned to the reality of the unseen world, and the President elected stood alone the only officer invested with the popular suffrage to exercise the functions of the Chief Magistracy...

Thus afflicted, bereft of his son, deprived of the counsel of the wise and patriotic Vice President, the Chief Magistrate centered his affections and extended his confidence to a distinguished Senator from his native State...

But he too has been summoned by that messenger that sooner or later consigns whatever is human to the tombs. Truly, the hand of the Almighty has rested heavily upon the brow of the President of the United States...

Gentlemen, I realize too deeply the afflictions and embarrassments that have thus far surrounded the President not to express the confident belief he will so administer the Government as to meet the wishes of that National Democracy who bore him so triumphantly into power.

Judge ROBERT B. WARREN has been appointed by the Supreme Court of Ohio reporter of its decisions.

John M. Sharp, the business manager of the Cincinnati Enquirer has been appointed mail agent between New York and San Francisco. No better man for the station could be found.

The Rochester Union.—This is an ably conducted and sterling Democratic journal published in a section of the Empire State where for many years, "anti-masonry" and whiggery held almost undisputed sway. It is conducted with ability, tact and discretion, and in it the Administration of President Pierce is judiciously and sincerely supported.

This paper, in commenting upon an article copied from another journal makes the following statements, which, it will be seen, are not at all flattering to Messrs. Cooley and Brady:

"The above is from the Detroit Free Press, and it doubtless reflects the sentiments and opinions of the honored statesman whose confidence the Free Press so richly deserves and so largely enjoys; and it also expresses the convictions of all true Democrats who look calmly and intelligently upon the effervescence of the hard-shell in this State. Every well-informed man knows—and nobody knows better than the hard-shell leaders—that their apparent strength is destined to melt away, or correct information and reasonable sense the place now held by pomposity and delusion. Look at one impressive fact: Cooley made his speech less than one week before election. That contained the first formal attack upon the President in which any leading hard-shell had ever indulged. It cost him more than one thousand votes per day. But five days intervened between that assault upon General Pierce and the election. But he falls short of Mr. Clinton over seven thousand votes."

"Another similar fact: Brady had also expressed, though not in decided language, his hostility to the President. And he falls below his colleague some few thousand votes."

"These facts prove incontestably that had the leaders avowed their opposition to the administration in time to have it understood by the people, their vote would have been utterly contemptible."

NEW ALBANY AND SELMA RAILROAD.—We learn from the N. Y. Tribune that the New Albany and Selma Railroad Company have sold between $6 and 700,000 of their 24 mortgage per cent. bonds, 20 years to run. This insures the early completion of the road from Michigan City to the Ohio River at New Albany, 288 miles.

The grading is all finished but about nine miles; 234 miles of the track is laid and the iron for the balance arrived. It is believed the iron will be down on all but 25 miles by the 1st of January next, and the whole line complete in May next. The loan was made not only to finish the road, but to add to the completion in addition one or two miles. The present form of the road is not being sufficient for the business now doing and preparing for the road is now being completed.

The new road will be built at a cost of $1,000,000, and will make the route from Selma to New Albany, 288 miles.

This sale of bonds was made to put largely interested in the stock of this road and the Michigan Central with which it connects.
