WILL IMPROVE STREET IN FALL

CITY COUNCIL ADOPTS PRELIMINARY RESOLUTION FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF COLLEGE AVENUE WITH SIDEWALKS, CURBINGS AND GUTTERS, AT MEETING TUESDAY EVENING—WILL LET CONTRACT WITHIN NEXT SIX WEEKS.

ENGINEERS PLANS READY

The improvement of College avenue with sidewalks, curbings and gutters from one extremity of the street to the other will be completed late this summer or early next fall according to the predictions of the city officials. The city council at its meeting in the council chamber Tuesday adopted the preliminary resolution for the improvement. The contract for the work will be let within the next few weeks.

City Engineer A. A. Lane presented to the council the plans and specifications for the improvement and they were placed on file. After a special meeting of the council is held and the residents of that street have the opportunity to file any remonstrances against the improvement, the contract will be let. Differences of opinion concerning the width of the sidewalks at various places on College avenue may cause changes to be made in Engineer Lane's plans. He has provided for a walk 4½ feet in width and a few of the College avenue people wish the walk to be 5 feet in width. Four councilmen voted for the adoption of the preliminary resolution, while one, Councilman Roy M. Abrams, voted against it. Councilman Edward Huffman was not present at the meeting.

Councilman Huffman reported the result of Mr. Stillwell's visit here to consider the repair of the square. Mr. Stillwell is a representative of the Madison Construction company, the company that builded the streets about the square four years ago. The contractor stated when here that he is willing to have the city engineer examine the streets and make an estimate of the cost of the repairs, and if reasonable he would be willing to defray the cost of the repairs. Should the repairs be made at this time, however, Mr. Stillwell wishes that the company be relieved from any future repair of the streets.

The other offer was to wait a year, at which time the contract expires, and have the streets repaired then. The council chose to take the former course and the streets will be repaired within the next month.

An ordinance providing for the issuing of a set of bonds for $2445, which money will be used for payment for the new road roller was passed by the council. The set will consist ten bonds, the value of which will be $242, each, bearing 4½ per cent. interest. The entire set will be taken up in 10 years.

The following people were granted permits to run tiles from the sewer system to their property lines: H. A. Newgent, G. H. Williams, Homer Sellars, Miss Helen Hathaway, E. R. Pruitt and Eugene Light.

Permits to build and remodel buildings of their properties were granted to H. A. Newgent, Mrs. Sarah Nutt, Ed McG. Walls, M. V. Goldberg and Charles J. Arnold.

Penal Farm Trustees Meet.

The trustees of the State Penal Farm met in their regular monthly session at the farm this morning. Those present were George E. Sidel of Richmond, James L. Randel of Greencastle and William C. Ball of Terre Haute. G. A. H. Shideler of Marion was the only member of the board who was not present. After going through the routine business of the board this morning, the members, this afternoon, accompanied by Superintendent C. E. Talkington made an inspection tour of the farm. No business of especial importance was transacted during the day.

WILL TEACH HOG CHOLERA CONTROL

DEMONSTRATION TRAIN SENT OUT BY PURDUE UNIVERSITY VETERINARY DIVISION, WILL BE IN GREENCASLE ALL DAY JULY 20—WILL TEACH BEST METHODS TO COMBAT THE DISEASE.

AT FILLMORE JULY 21

Beginning July 20th, the Veterinary Division of the Extension Department of Purdue University will operate a hog cholera demonstration train over the Pennsylvania lines in Indiana. The train will make stops of several hours each in over forty counties. One car will be used for exhibit materials and demonstrations bearing on hog cholera control, the other is to be used for lecture purposes.

An excellent opportunity will be afforded farmers and others interested in the important subject of hog cholera control to become acquainted with the latest and best methods used in combating the disease.

It is seldom that, in any state, an opportunity of this kind is afforded to learn practical and important things concerning the hog cholera scourge which has caused such an enormous loss in recent years.

The train will be in charge of C. G. Starr of the Veterinary Department. An itinerary covering a period of seven or eight weeks has been planned. Following is the schedule for the first few days of the itinerary:—Greencastle all day July 20; Fillmore, July 21, 9:13 a. m. to 3:02 p. m.; Mooresville, July 22, 8:30 a. m. to 5:24 p. m.; Martinsville, night meeting, July 22, exhibit car open till 1:05 p. m. July 23; Gosport, July 23, 1:31 p. m. to 6:27 p. m.; Spencer, July 24, 8:00 a. m. to 1:47 p. m.; Worthington, July 24, 2:19 p. m. to 6:00 p. m.; Switz City, July 27, 10:44 a. m. to 2:31 p. m.; Bicknell, July 27, 3:24 p. m. to 8:50 p. m.

Further announcement concerning the schedule will appear at a later date.

The Rev. A. M. Hootman was in Roachdale to attend the chautauqua Tuesday. The Rev. E. G. Shouse, of the chautauqua company which has charge of the Roachdale chautauqua, is in Roachdale today.

FRED EVANS IS NEW PRINCIPAL

FORMER SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS AT PLAINFIELD AND NORTH SALEM, IS ELECTED TO FILL VACANCY OF THIRD WARD PRINCIPALSHIP, CAUSED BY RESIGNATION OF JAMES W. RICHARDSON.

IS VERY CAPABLE TEACHER

Fred Evans, former superintendent of the schools at Plainfield and North Salem, was named as the successor of James W. Richardson, who recently resigned his position as principal of third ward public school of this city, by the city school board at its meeting in the office of Superintendent H. A. Henderson Tuesday evening.

Mr. Evans has had much experience in school work and the board considered him the most capable of a large number of applicants for the position. He was for five years superintendent of the schools at North Salem, Ind., and later held the same position in Plainfield for eleven years. He is a graduate of the Indiana State Normal School and has taken special work in both Indiana and Chicago universities.

For the past four years he has been farming in eastern Illinois. He was especially desirous of procuring a position in Greencastle. Mr. Evans and his family are now residing with the former's mother south of the city. He has many relatives in this community and is well known here.

James W. Richardson, who has held the principalship of the third ward school for the past few years, resigned his position in order that he might take up special school work in Indiana university.

COUNTY COUNCIL MEETS SATURDAY

MONEY TO BE USED FOR THE REPAIR OF BRIDGES WHICH WERE DAMAGED BY THE HEAVY RAINS LAST WEEK WILL BE APPROPRIATED BY COUNTY COUNCILMAN WHO HAVE BEEN NOTIFIED TO MEET IN SPECIAL SESSION.

RAINS DAMAGE 14 BRIDGES

The county council will meet in the commissioners' room of the court house next Saturday for the purpose of appropriating money for the repair of the bridges, which were damaged by the heavy rains and high water last week.

According to County Road Superintendent Lisby, fourteen bridges were washed out by the high water caused by the exceedingly heavy rains. A number have been badly damaged and it will be necessary for the county to spend a large amount of money for the necessary repairs. The funds now available are not sufficient to defray the expenses of repairing the bridges.

The members of the county council are John Sinclair of Marion township, William Burris of Cloverdale, Ora Day of Fillmore, Clay Bridges of Roachdale, W. F. Davis of Roachdale, Ed. McG. Walls of Greencastle and David Skelton of Reelsville.

The council meets once each year for the purpose of appropriating money to defray the county's expenses, according to state statutes. The meetings are held in September, but Putnam county officials find it necessary to have a special meeting this month.

The Bridge Club met Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. H. M. Smith.

"I should like to ask," writes an "American-born" citizen, "which is the more dangerous to this country, 'Prussian militarism or British navalism?'"

Well, without making any envious choice between two evils, it's agree that the world would be much better off without either.

SICK CATS.

Says a self-styled "Heartbroken Lady" in a letter to a New York newspaper:

"Do you think it is fair to bring a pet cat to a hospital and after paying $2 for treatment not to get any, but next day to find said cat lying in a dirty, wet, cold cage in a dying condition, with not even a drink of water? Yet there are some people who talk so much about what is done for the prevention of cruelty to animals!"

"My cat died without treatment, the assistant doctor not being man enough to say he could not handle the case, and only caring for the two-dollar bill. 'I think it is a shame. Please put this in your paper, so that nobody else's pet will have to suffer the same way.'"

It's a beastly shame, there's no doubt of it! A person can't help wondering, however, what would be thought of such a letter if it appeared in a London, Paris, Berlin or Petrograd newspaper. The civilized world has got pretty much past grieving for cats. There are sterner things to think about. Any normal man or woman called upon to weep for "a cat lying in a dirty, wet, cold cage in a dying condition" is apt to think involuntarily of the tens of thousands of men lying in worse plight than that between firing lines where there is no respite either to relieve the wounded or bury the dead.

BRIDAL GALLUSES.

The New York Herald seems to think there is something funny in this quotation from the Joliet Herald-News, which it sarcastically captions "An Example of Climax:"

"The charm of a perfect June evening with the odor of roses in the air and a cloudless sky, added the final note of exquisite harmony to the appointments of a sweetly simple wedding last night at Grace M. E. church which united in the holy bonds of marriage Miss Edna Nichols and Howard Bateman. One of the interesting features of the bridegroom's part in the wedding was the fact that the suspenders which he wore had been carefully embroidered seventy years before by his grandmother for his grandfather's wedding day."

But if the bride had worn her grandmother's silken hose on the same happy occasion, or her great-uncle's bridal veil brought over-seas by her sailor great-uncle, or something like that, the mention of it would have been taken with entire and sentimental seriousness. Was it not indeed a delicate sentiment which prompted the bridegroom thus to show his appreciation of his grandmother's dainty and affectionate handiwork?

And if women are to have votes, why shouldn't men have embroidery? Is not perfect equality what is desired by all true feminists? Although, when one comes to think of it, a modern man who craved embroidered lingerie will probably be compelled to look among his grandmother's belongings to find it.

What has become, anyhow, of the old-fashioned girl who used to embroider suspenders for her beloved?

TOBACCO AND CANCER.

An article in the New York Medical Journal written by Dr. Robert Abbe, senior surgeon of St. Luke's Hospital, sheds new light on the causes of cancer, and particularly cancer of the mouth. It is a calm but scathing arraignment of tobacco, and necessarily when it is used rationally but when it is smoked or chewed in excessive quantities.

Of 100 victims of mouth cancer that Dr. Abbe studied, only ten were women. One of these suffered from a virulent case of tongue cancer, and confessed to the habit of dipping a toothbrush in snuff and rubbing it on her tongue because "she liked the stinging sensation." Another smoked a package of cigars every day.

Of the 90 men, all but one were inveterate smokers, the doctor reports. Most of them smoked cigars, to the number of three to twenty a day. Five cancer-of-the-tongue victims smoked only cigars. One of them consumed fifty a day.

"Many of the patients," says the doctor, "used a pipe, which often caused cancer to begin where the end of the pipe stem allowed the hot smoke to come upon the tongue."

Thirteen of the men had cancer inside the cheek, and all of these had chewed tobacco as well as smoked. In every case, the cancer started where the tobacco quid was held in the cheek, or on the edge of the palate, or tongue near by.

Chronic irritation, Dr. Abbe explains, may be set down as a fundamental cause. The use of tobacco may be the original cause of the irritation, as when smoke from a pipe continually burns the tongue, or the tobacco may aggravate the irritation when it has once appeared.

Often a broken tooth or a sharp tooth-edge causes the original inflammation that leads to the cancerous growth. The one man of the ninety who did not smoke had cancer of the lip, starting in a scar caused by an old baseball injury.

Burning the tongue in any way is dangerous. One of the victims said she had often burned her tongue with hot coffee. About one-tenth of the patients, Dr. Abbe said, plainly owned their affliction either to a rough tooth or to hot, burning drinks, or both. "The other nine-tenths of the cases are chargeable to tobacco."

After such a warning, it should take little argument to induce any man who smokes excessively to cut down his tobacco ration, and if he is troubled with a sore mouth to cut it out altogether. Usually the only deterrent from excessive smoking is bad nerves. But cancer is worse than nerves.

DELAVAN'S SUBMARINES.

The Evansville Courier, democratic in politics, not always agreeing with Thomas Taggart in political judgment but always as fair in all things as is Taggart, thus speaks editorially of the evidence through which Delavan Smith and his Indianapolis newspaper seeks to carry out its published threat to "utterly destroy Taggart."

"We do not wish to prejudice the election cases in Indianapolis but it is pertinent to call attention to facts as they disclose themselves.

"Our general notion about the matter is that Thomas Taggart, Mayor Bell and Chief of Police Perrott had as much to do with the election irregularities in Indianapolis as the general manager of a railroad has when a conductor illegally throws a passenger off a train. General manager and conductor all belong to the same organization with the common object of operating the line. The conductor ejects the passenger because he thinks it is carrying out the common purpose. Therefore, there is a general conspiracy on the part of the general manager and the conductor to do an illegal act.

"But to call attention to some facts developed yesterday.

"Five of the 127 men originally indicted failed to appear because no such persons can be found or are known to exist. Curiously enough though Mr. Taggart stands charged with having conspired with five persons who do not walk this earth to carry the election in Marion county for the democratic party. If the grand jury's evidence is as ghostly as the persons who actually conspired with Mr. Taggart to commit felonies, the cases probably should be transferred to the land of the shades for trial.

"Seven men arraigned pleaded guilty yesterday. One of them, James Lee, was under bond of $5,000. The others were either under bond or in custody. Immediately after they pleaded guilty those under bond were released on their own recognizance. While merely suspected, they are required to give heavy surety. When they profess guilt, they are freed. Odd, isn't it?"

"Two of the three not permitted their freedom were held for matters not pertaining to the present case. Nelson Hughes is in jail on a charge of forgery. Earl Clifford is serving a term in the workhouse.

"Two of the four men pleading guilty and given their liberty are negroes.

"Two negroes and two jail birds pleaded guilty. We assume they are to be star witnesses for the state. We doubt very much if the citizens of Indianapolis very seriously believe that their mayor conspired with these jail birds and negroes, along with five others who don't exist to steal an election. If Mayor Bell did anything of the sort directly or indirectly, his place is in the detention ward and not in a court of justice.

"In Indianapolis the cases are variously regarded as jokes or outrages. So why should any one outside the capitol regard the matter more seriously?"

"Indianapolis is welcome to its unpleasant notoriety. The political animus will disclose itself in time and perish of its own venom."

SAFETY IN SUBMARINES.

(By W. H. Alburn.)

The submarine, thanks to Germany's efficient use of it, has won recognition. It is no longer a toy, but the most dreaded of naval fighting craft. It is looked upon as the warship of the future. Its serviceability for coast defense is not questioned, even by the most cautious expert. And yet it may be that in the United States where the submarine was invented and largely perfected, we have not yet begun to realize its possibilities in the way of supplying our peculiar needs. The last congress voted money to build 26 new submarines, intended primarily for coast defense. The next congress may vote more. But few Americans appreciate how fully the under-sea boat may protect our shores from attack and our territory from invasion, and how simple and inexpensive it might be to supply the necessary vessels.

Simon Lake of Bridgeport, Conn., is said to be the greatest living authority on submarines. He may be prejudiced in their favor, because he builds them, but he certainly knows about them. He is the creator of the even-keel submarine, the type used by the Germans. And he declares unequivocally that the war has proved what he long preached in vain—that the submarine is destined not only to be mistress of the naval warfare, but actually to stop naval warfare, because no other warships can fight, or even exist, in the presence of a perfected submarine fleet. Furthermore, he declares that this country can obtain all the naval protection it needs by a very simple method and expenditure of a comparatively small sum of money.

We should build, he says, without delay, a fleet of about 150 submarines, 100 for the eastern coast and 50 for the Pacific. These would be of the best modern type, costing about $500,000 apiece. The total cost would thus be $75,000,000, which is about half what we spend on our navy every year, and about five times the price of a superdreadnought. Such fleets, he is convinced, would give us ample protection against attacks on our seaports, and against any attempt on the part of a hostile power to land troops on our shores.

To make the protection doubly sure, he further suggests a surprising innovation. He would build a small fleet of what he calls "amphibious submarines," costing only half as much as the others, weighing little more than 100 tons, and capable of being transported by railroad. These would be held in reserve, and in case of need could be rushed overland, at the rate of 35 miles an hour, in perfect safety, to any part of the coast where they were needed. The various seaports would be equipped with facilities for launching them. Their mobility on land would make them more valuable than any existing submarines. They could be more speedily mobilized, he says, than the fastest fleet of battle cruisers and superdreadnoughts. They could be shipped across the continent if necessary, and the crippling of the Panama Canal would not interfere with rushing the requisite number for the protection of either coast.

Now comes a still more picturesque suggestion, which seems like a continuation of the same line of thought, though it has been worked out independently. It is from Prof. Herschel C. Parker, recently professor of physics in Columbia university, inventor of the helioscope, a distinguished explorer and a scientist of high standing. He has invented the smallest type of submarine in existence, and is convinced that it will solve the problem of coast defense in the simplest and least expensive way.

His submarine is little larger than a torpedo. In fact, it is intended as the carrier of a single torpedo, and is to be operated by one man, or two at most. It is really a submerged motor boat of great speed and power. The length of it is about twenty feet; it might be even less. It is just high enough for a man to stand erect. It is shaped like a perfect cigar. There are two compartments, one forward and one aft. The aft section is taken up by a six-cylinder gasoline engine, with an intake and exhaust rising about seven feet above the craft, giving the boat the protection of perhaps five feet of water when submerged. Forward is a little room and platform for the operator, with the periscope rising above to a level with the intake and exhaust pipes. In front, occupying a tube in the very center of the boat's sharp nose, is the torpedo, always ready for launching. The operator simply faces the target and let's her go.

Such a craft, says the inventor, could be built for $5,000, and run by any man able to run a motor boat. For the price of the new battleship Arizona, $16,000,000 complete, more than 3,000 of them could be built. They would be held ready for instant launching in every seaport. They would be carried, by battleships, cruisers, and torpedo boats, and even by large submarines. On the approach of the enemy, a swarm of them would be carried, by battleships, and one torpedo. If a dozen of them attacked a battleship one or two might be lost; the rest would "get" it. A hundred or a thousand of them, he believes, would destroy any fleet that could be assembled.

If it's so easy as all that, our problem of national defense is solved.

OBITUARY.

"A beautiful Christian life."
Lena Opal Stoner was born Dec. 6, 1891 and died July 10, 1915, at the age of 23 years, 7 months and 4 days. She was the daughter of Andrew and Alice Forbes. She was born and reared at Farmersburg and united with the Methodist church of that place at a very early age and it can be truly said she was a devout Christian. She was a constant and faithful attendant at God's services, feeling it a pleasure and her duty that her place of worship be filled by none other than herself. Her exemplary Christian life is better shown and told when at the age of 17 years she was called to fill the vacancy left by the death of her most sacred friend and guide—her mother. With that faith which knows no fear she began her new work of caring for her two little sisters, Jennie and Ruth, who like herself, were left motherless. Her's was a life of sacrifice, ever ready to give of her time, means and strength to the comfort and needs of her loved ones. Her dependableness in duties she assumed received high commendation; her character traits included fidelity, sympathy, generosity, sincerity and zeal in good works. She was married to Russell Stoner Nov. 11, 1913, and to this union was given the memory of an infant babe, Ruth, who went on to shine as their star of hope with God's "little jewels." Here again she proved her faith, when she trusted all to her Infinite Maker and again took up the cross. She was a happy wife, grateful and proud of the comforts of home, so devoted to her husband that when disease in all of its terrors, robbed her of her vision she was satisfied if only she could touch the hem of his garment. There is something inexpressibly sad in her passing away as even as her friendship ripened into love for her husband, she was welcomed into the home of his parents as a comforter to again fill the vacancies made in that home by the reaper called death. So appreciated was she in that home that every thorn was removed and her path strewn with roses in return for her simple, childlike devotion and that marked degree the charity that "thinketh no evil" and that other charity grace that endearth her to all. She was not of the most rugged constitution, but her fatal sickness was of but a few months' duration, which made it necessary for her to be brought to the home of "Mother Stoner." She was grateful ever patient, kind and hopeful and had it been her privilege to have left a message it would have been Hope on, Trust on.

"There is no unbeliever
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod
And waits to see it push away the clod
He trusts in God.
There is no unbeliever.
For thus by day and night unconsciously

The heart lives by faith the lips deny
God knoweth why."
She leaves to mourn her demise her husband, father, two sisters, a grandmother and a number of other relatives and a host of loyal friends bound by her love and service. As a child she was obedient; as a young lady she was trustworthy; as a wife she was dutiful; a mother in love. Another hand is beckoning us, Another call is given,
And glows once more with angle steps
The path that reaches heaven.
As pure and sweet her faith brow seemed
Eternal as the sky;
And, like the brook's low song, her voice
A sound which could not die
The blessings of her quiet life
Fell on us like the dew;
And good thoughts where her footsteps pressed
Like fairy blossoms grew.
Sweet promptings into kindest deeds
Were in her very look;
We read her face as one who reads

SYNOPSIS.

Sanford Quest, master criminologist of the world, finds that in bringing to justice MacDougal, the murderer of Lord Ashleigh's daughter, he has but just begun a life-and-death struggle with a mysterious master criminal. In a hidden hut in Professor Ashleigh's garden he has seen an ape skeleton and a living creature, half monkey, half man, destroyed by fire. In his rooms have appeared black boxes containing notes, signed by a pair of armless hands, Laura and Lenora, his assistants, suspecting the professor's servant, of a double murder. The black boxes continue to appear in uncanny fashion. Quest, captured, escapes to Port Said. Quest and his party follow, and beyond into the desert. They are captured by Mongars, escape with Craig as their captive, and turn him over to Inspector French in San Francisco. He escapes in a train wreck, outgenerals his pursuers, and goes back to New York, where he dies while Quest is attempting to hypnotize him into confession.

FIFTEENTH INSTALLMENT

CHAPTER XXXV.

The first shock was over. Craig's body had been removed, and the girls had taken Mary, half stunned with grief, to their room. French and Quest were left alone. "That is some disappointment," the former remarked, gloomily. "It is a disappointment," Quest said, slowly, "which may clear the way to bigger things." "What's in your mind now?" French inquired. Quest shook his head. "A turmoil. First of all, where is the professor?" "Must have scouted right away home," French suggested. "He was looking pretty sick all the time. Guess it must have been a powerful shock for him, and he isn't so young as he used to be." "Give me that paper of Craig's again," Quest asked. The inspector produced the document from his inner pocket, and Quest, stretching it out upon his knee, read it word for word. "Never to communicate or to have anything to do with anyone of the name of Ashleigh, eh?" he remarked, as he handed it back again. "Rather a queer provision, that, French." "I've been thinking that myself," the inspector admitted. Quest glanced at the clock. "Well," he said, "if you're ready, inspector, we'll be getting along." The two men drove to the outskirts of the city almost in silence. The professor's house seemed more than ever deserted as they drew up at the front door. They entered without ringing and crossed the hall towards the library. On the threshold Quest seized and held up his finger. "Someone is in there," he whispered, stepping quickly forward. "Come!" He threw open the door. The room was empty, yet both Quest and French were conscious of a curious conviction that it had been occupied within the last few seconds. "Quest, but it seemed to me I heard someone," French muttered. "I was sure of it," Quest replied. They stood still for a moment and listened. The silence in the empty house was almost unnatural. Quest turned away with a shrug of the shoulders. "At any rate," he said, "Craig's dying thoughts must have been trying. Come." He led the way to the fireplace, went down on his knees and passed his hands over the bricks. The third one he touched, shook. He tapped it—without a doubt it was hollow. With his penknife he loosened the mortar a little and drew it out easily. The back was open. Inside was the black box. "Craig's secret at last!" French muttered, hoarsely. "Bring it to the light, quick!" They were unemotional men, but the moment was supreme. The key to the mystery of these tragical weeks was there in their hands! Their eyes almost devoured those few hastily scrawled words buried with so much care: See Page 62, January Number, American Medical Journal, 1905. They looked at one another. They repeated vaguely this most commonplace of messages. As the final result of their strenuous enterprise, these cryptic words seemed pitifully inadequate. Quest's face darkened. He crumpled the paper in his fingers. "There must be some meaning in this," he muttered. "It can't be altogether a fool's game were on. Wait." He moved towards a table which usually stood against the wall, but which had obviously been dragged out recently into the middle of the room. It was covered with bound volumes. Quest glanced at one and exclaimed softly: "American Medical Journal, 1905! French, there's something in this message, after all." He turned over the pages rapidly. Then he came to a stop. Page 61 was there; page 62 had been neatly removed with a pair of scissors. "The professor!" he cried. "The professor's been at work here!" The two men stood looking at one another across the table. Strange thoughts were framing themselves in the brains of both of them. Then there came a startling and in its way a dramatic interlude. Through the empty house came the ringing of the electric bell from the front door, shrill and insistent. Without a moment's hesitation, Quest hurried out and French followed him. On the doorstep and Laura were there, the former carrying a small, black-bound volume. "Don't be cross," she begged, quickly. "We just had to come. Look! It must have slipped from his pocket. You see what is written on it?" Diary of John Craig. Quest took it in his hand. "Say, this ought to be interesting," he remarked. "Come along." They passed into the library. French lingered behind for a moment and caught them up just as they were opening the book underneath the electric lamp. "See here what I've found!" he exclaimed. "It was just by the side of the wall there. Where's that magazine?" He spread out the piece of paper—it fitted exactly into the empty space. They all read together: Professor Ashleigh, after being bitten by the anthropoloid, rapidly developed hydrophobia of a serious nature. After treatment with a new serum the patient was relieved of the hydrophobic symptoms, but to my horror this mild-mannered, humane man seems possessed at times of all the characteristics of the brutal anthropoloid—cunning, thievish, brutality. I do not know what may come of this. I hesitate to put even these words on to paper. I am doubtful as to what course, in the interests of humanity, I ought to take. (Signed) JAMES MERRILL, M. D. Editor's Note—Just as we go to press, a cable announces the terrible death of Doctor Merrill, the writer of the above notes. He was attacked by wild animals whilst alone in a South American jungle, and torn to pieces. There was a queer little silence among the company. No one seemed inclined for speech. They looked at one another in dumb, wondering horror. Then Quest drew a penknife from his pocket and with a turn of his wrist forced the lock of the diary. They all watched him with fascinated eyes. It was something to escape from their thoughts. They leaned over as he spread the book out before him. Those first two sentences were almost in the nature of a dedication: For ten years I have protected my master, Prof. Edgar Ashleigh, at the cost of my peace of mind, my happiness, my reputation. This book, even though it be too late to help me, shall clear my reputation. Quest closed the volume. "French," he decided, "we must find the professor. Will you have your men search the house and grounds immediately?" The inspector left the room like a dazed man. They could hear him giving orders outside. "The next page," Lenora begged. "Just one page more!" Quest hesitated for a moment. Then he turned it over. All three read again: Ten years of horror, struggling all the while to keep him from that other self, that thing of bestiality, to keep his horrible secret from the world, to cover up his crimes, even though their shadow should rest upon me. Now Sanford Quest has come. Will this mean discovery? "Another page," Quest said. "Don't you see where it is leading us? We have the truth here. Wait!" He strode hastily to the door. French and one of the plain-clothes men were descending the stairs. "Well!" Quest asked, breathlessly. "The professor is not in the house," French reported. "We are going to search the grounds." Quest returned to the library. Lenora clung to his arm. The diary lay still upon the table. Quest opened the volume slowly. Again they all read together: The evil nature is growing stronger every day. He is developing a sort of ferocious cunning to help him in his crimes. He wanders about in the dark, wearing a black velvet suit with holes for his eyes, and leaving only his hands exposed. I have watched him come into a half-darkened room and one can see nothing but the hands and the eyes; sometimes if he closes his eyes, only the hands. "Mrs. Rheinholdt!" Quest muttered. The door was suddenly opened and French entered. "Beaten!" he exclaimed, tersely. "You haven't found him?" Quest asked. French shook his head. "We've searched every room, every cupboard, every scrap of the cellar in the place," he announced. "We've been into every corner of the grounds, searched it all backwards and forwards. There's no sign of the professor." Quest pocketed the diary. "You're perfectly certain that he is not in this house or anywhere upon the premises?" "Certain sure!" French replied. Quest shrugged his shoulders. "Well, we'd better get back," he said. They were on the point of starting, the chauffeur with his hand upon the starting handle, French with the steering wheel of the police car already in his hand. And then the little party seemed suddenly turned to stone. For a few breathless seconds not one of them moved. Out into the clammy night air came the echoes of a hideous, inhuman, blood-curdling scream. Quest was the first to recover himself. He leaped from his seat and rushed back across the empty hall into the study, followed a little way behind by French and the others. An unsuspected panel door which led into the garden stood slightly ajar. The professor, with his hand on the back of a chair, was staring at the fireplace, shaking as though with some horrible agony, his face distorted, his body curiously hunched up. He seemed suddenly to have dropped his humanity, to have fallen back into the world of some strange creatures. He heard their footsteps, but he did not turn his head. His hands were stretched out in front of him as though to keep away from his sight some hateful object. "Stop him!" he cried. "Take him away! It's Craig—his spirit! He came to me in the garage, he followed me through the grounds, he mocked at me when I hid in the tree. He's there now, kneeling before the fireplace. Why can't I kill him! He is coming! Stop him, someone!" No one spoke or moved; no one, indeed, had the power. Then at last Quest found words. "There is no one in the room, professor," he said, "except us." The sound of a human voice seemed to produce a strange effect. The professor straightened himself, shook his head, his hands dropped to his side, ghastly pale, but his smile was once more the smile of the amiable naturalist. "My friends," he said, "forgive me. I am very old, and the events of these last few hours have unnerved me. Forgive me." He groped for a moment and sank into a chair. Quest fetched a decanter and a glass from the sideboard, poured out some wine and held it to his lips. The professor drank it eagerly. "My dear friend," he exclaimed, "you have saved me. I have something to tell you, something I must tell you at once, but not here. I loathe this place. Let me come with you to your rooms." "As you please," Quest answered, calmly. He gripped Quest's arm. In silence they passed from the room, in silence they took their places once more in the automobiles, in silence they drove without a pause to Quest's rooms. The professor made his way at once to his favorite easy chair, threw off his overcoat and leaned back. "Quest," he pronounced, "you are the best friend I have in my life! It is you who have rid me of my great burden. Tell me—help me a little with my story—have you read that page from the Medical Journal which

The Professor Sat There Like a Figure of Stone.

Craig has kept locked up all these years?" "We have all read it," Quest replied. "It was forged," the professor declared, firmly, "forged by Craig. All the years since he has blackmailed me. I have been afraid to speak. At last I am free of him. Thank God!" "Craig, after all," French muttered. Lenora stood a little apart with a faint frown upon her forehead. She touched Quest on the shoulder. "Mr. Quest," she murmured, "he is lying!" Quest turned his head. His lips scarcely moved. "What do you mean?" he whispered. "He is lying!" Lenora insisted. "I tell you there's another creature there, something we don't understand. Let me bring the electro-thought transference apparatus; let us read his mind. If I am wrong, I will go down on my knees and beg for forgiveness." (To Be Continued Saturday.) For quick results try a Herald Want Ad.

WASPS AND OAK LEAVES.

Numerous Round, Bright Colored Disks Are Found.

Many people have wondered what makes the numerous tiny, round, bright colored disks that after mid-summer are to be found on the leaves of certain oaks, says the Youth's Companion. The disks are spangie galls, and are the work of a small wasp. During the early summer the insect lays her eggs on the leaves, and in so doing sets up an irritation that causes the galls to form. Each gall is the home of a single caterpillar.

When the leaves fall and the caterpillars are ready to take the chrysalis form, the galls become detached from the leaves, fall and are buried in the grass and litter beneath the trees. Early in the spring the female insects emerging from the galls lay their eggs beneath the bud scales of the oak. As the leaves and flowers grow, galls of quite a different character from the spangie galls appear on them. The new galls, which are frequently called "red currant galls," are more or less fleshy, rounded and bright red in color.

In June both male and female insects emerge from these galls. The female lays her eggs in the leaves, from which come new spangie galls and new female insects. Single leaves are often hosts for hundreds of galls. Fortunately, the insect in no stage of its life history appears to exert any seriously harmful effect upon the oak tree, although the growth of young trees might be checked if the insects appeared in great numbers for several successive years.

WHEN THE ENVELOPE CAME.

It Was Many Years After Posting of Missives.

It was many years after the writing and posting of missives became a general practice that envelopes came into use. Previous to this time letters and circulars were sealed in various ways, most of which were more or less uncertain and troublesome, but the invention of the envelope went far toward overcoming all inconveniences, and today no other method is used.

The invention of the envelope is generally credited to S. K. Brewer, bookseller and stationer of Brighton, England. The story runs that in 1839 he had for sale some small sheets of paper whereon it was difficult to write the address. Accordingly he devised small envelopes and had metal plates made for cutting them into the desired shape and size. They caught the fancy naturally of the Brighton ladies, and his orders multiplied so rapidly that he finally had them manufactured for him by a prominent firm in London. This was the beginning of the trade.

It was not until ten years later, however, that they came into general use. The first practical machine for making envelopes was patented in England in 1845, by Warren De La Rue and Edwin Hill. In America the first patent was granted in 1849 to J. K. Park and C. S. Watson. The De La Rue machine was in many respects similar to the machines now in use, but instead of gumming and lifting the blank in practically one operation the blank was lifted by Indian rubber fingers, then gummed by a separate arm.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Traveling Man's Experience.

"In the summer of 1888 I had a very severe attack of cholera morbus. Two physicians worked over me from four a. m. to 6 p. m. without giving me any relief and then told me they did not expect me to live; that I had best telegraph for my family. Instead of doing so, I gave the hotel porter fifty cents and told him to buy me a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and take no substitute. I took a double dose according to the directions and went to sleep after the second dose. At five o'clock the next morning I was called by my order and took a train for my next stopping point, a well man but feeling rather shaky from the severity of the attack," writes H. W. ROLLER WORKS ON STREETS WITH GOOD RESULTS TODAY

The demonstration of the work of the new Huber road roller was continued today with excellent results. An excellent surface has been built on Walnut street between Indiana and Jackson street and the roller has been used to a great advantage in the work. The street was torn up Tuesday morning and a large quantity of new material was put on the street. The rock was packed down by the roller and today a smooth surface was built. The water binder finish was put on the street and the thoroughfare is now in excellent shape for travel.

Vine street between Walnut and Poplar streets has been torn up and will undergo the same kind of repair work. The scarifier attachment is a very efficient means of loosening the material in the streets and the weight of the roller packs the streets in great shape. Rex Hunt, the local engineer, operated the machine today and will have charge of the outfit after the machine is accepted by the council.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.

Notice is hereby given that on Saturday, August 7th, 1915, at 2 o'clock p. m. at the city library in the City of Greencastle, Putnam County, Indiana, the undersigned School Board will receive bids for the improvement of the Greencastle high school building located on Elm street in said city; said improvement to consist of the installation of a complete heating, plumbing and ventilating system, and to be in all respects according to the plans and specifications adopted by the school board of said city, now on file in said library. Bidders can obtain complete copies of the drawings, plans and specifications by applying to Herbert L. Bass, Architect, Indianapolis, Indiana. Bids will be received as a whole for the entire work, or bids may be given separately on the heating and ventilating; and on the plumbing. Each bid must be accompanied by a bond for an amount equal to the amount of the bid. Contracts will be let to the lowest responsible bidder. The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

TEACHER SAYS PUPIL DID NOT WHIP HIM

To the Editor:—
I have before me a clipping from a recent issue and several letters from friends in Indiana concerning an escapade of one Roy Oakley of Roachdale wherein he "licked" a former teacher, robbed a cash drawer and looked up the St. Louis police to ease his conscience.

I am not sure that I am concerned, but as I am the only Littell that, to my knowledge, ever taught school in Roachdale, I must be the one to whom he referred. If Oakley had reference to me, he must have been "seeing things," or he has his names and dates badly mixed, for his whole story is a fabrication.

I taught at Roachdale ten years ago, not fourteen, and can not recall that he was ever in any of my classes, although I have known his family for a number of years. I am quite sure I never gave him or any one else the "licking" in the manner he spoke of, and I am equally sure that I did not receive any, as I have not been in Indianapolis for two years.

If Oakley "licked" any one, which I very much doubt, some other fellow "got mine." I am getting the fame without the game, and as I weigh 190 pounds in my "gym" suit and have a great deal of pride and some little local reputation as a boxer, I naturally am sorry I missed the affair.

RECEIVE PLANS FOR HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING REPAIRS

The plans and specifications for the remodeling of the high school building were presented to the city school board by Architect H. L. Bass of Indianapolis, at the meeting of the board Tuesday evening. The blue prints and plans will be on exhibition in the city library after Monday. The contract for the work of remodeling the building will be let the first week in August.

The improvements which will be made on the building will enable the school board to procure a commission for the high school next year. The state board of education threatened to refuse the high school a commission next year on account of the unsatisfactory condition of the building. The school board is now making an effort to repair the building in order to satisfy the requirements of the state board. The work of excavating under the building has been well under way for the past several weeks and it is probable that the work will be completed in a month. The repair work on the building will not be finished before the opening of school, but this will not interfere greatly with school work.

The school board closed a contract with J. W. Herod of south Greencastle for coal to be used by the schools next winter. Mr. Herod's bid for the contract was the lowest of four bids submitted to the board. The other bidders were Ferd Lucas, Oscar Williams and the Thomas Buggy company.

SHERIFF'S AUTO WRECKED NEAR THE STATE FARM

A large Haynes touring car owned by Sheriff Popejoy of Carroll county, was wrecked on the National Road near the State Farm Tuesday afternoon, when the driver lost control of the machine while descending a hill near the office of the state institution. The machine was damaged but the three occupants of the car escaped injury.

Sheriff Popejoy, accompanied by his wife, had taken a prisoner to the State Farm office where the latter was registered as an inmate of the institution and started to the other farm buildings. Mr. Popejoy lost control of his car when descending the hill near the office and the car went into the ditch and turned over. The front wheel was broken, and the front axle and fenders were bent. The car was brought here for repairs and Sheriff and Mrs. Popejoy returned to their home in Delphi today.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hurst entertained the members of the board of review Tuesday evening. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Sylvan Vermilion, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Runyan, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Airhart and Mr. and Mrs. Drake Brookshire of Roachdale.

JUST COMPARE SMITH AND THOMAS TAGGART (By Willis S. Thompson.)

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 14.—There is one very interesting feature, involving comparisons, in the proceedings in the Marion county election indictments. The newspapers of the state, of all political opinions and beliefs, have spoken their opinions on the subject with much frankness.

Many of the newspapers of political beliefs opposed to those of Thomas Taggart, have taken occasion to say things of Mr. Taggart and his splendid constructive record as a citizen, a public official and a man of business who has achieved success both remarkable and honorable. I have studied the state newspapers with some care and have failed to find any of importance among them saying "utterly destroy" Thomas Taggart, I have not found any newspaper of small or large consequence saying a kind or generous word for Delavan Smith or his newspaper. Delavan Smith feels the condemnation of the public and his newspaper and is pretending to be "scooped" on the features of the case as they develop, refusing even to copy the news from the other newspapers after it is printed. He wants the people to believe he does not know what is going on. While it can add no new light it may be of passing interest to contrast the character and works of Mr. Taggart with those of the individuals who have never overlooked a chance tending to the accomplishment of that threat, no matter how desperate the methods employed. Out apologies, to Mr. Taggart for making the comparison.

John B. Stoll in his newspaper the other day, told something of the story of Mr. Taggart's business success. Among other things how he had taken an unattractive spot at French Lick, and despite the never ceasing attempts of Delavan Smith and his newspaper to destroy, had made it one of the most beautiful places on top of earth. The story was told showing some of the things Mr. Taggart had done to the upbuilding of the state in which he lives, and which people from other states, like Delavan Smith of Illinois, come over and try to destroy from selfish and vicious motives. Further Mr. Stoll says, "Tom Taggart would make just as successful president of a bank or railroad as he is proving himself a landlord of marvelous capacity."

"No man in Indiana has contributed more generously to benevolence than has Tom Taggart. Three churches at French Lick owe their existence to Tom Taggart. No man or woman really in need and worthy of assistance was ever turned away empty-handed by him. Politically he is the most unselfish individual in the state. He doesn't want office. His participation in political campaigns is due entirely to an irresistible inclination to serve his friends and shape party policies conducive to the general welfare."

In politics, in business and in his personal affairs no man has ever been subjected to such vile abuse as has Thomas Taggart at the hands of Delavan Smith and his newspaper. He has gone his way as though neither of them ever existed. He has gone about his business in a straightforward way and succeeded marvelously in spite of their abuse and hatred. Delavan Smith in his rage has declared he will destroy Taggart. He has sought to destroy French Lick because Taggart built it. Under the abuse and misrepresentation by Delavan Smith and his hand-picked public officials since the place was first opened, it has grown to be one of the greatest resorts of the world, patronized regularly by the most respected families from the forty-eight states and from all the countries of Europe. Of the fortune Mr. Taggart has made by his own efforts, he has given thousands to worthy causes where Delavan Smith has not given a five-cent piece. Thomas Taggart does not send out trumpeters to herald his good works. He does not give to be seen of men as Delavan Smith believes men should give, if they give at all.

Did you ever hear that Delavan Smith did anything constructive for the community? Did you ever hear that Delavan Smith did a worthy act through any benevolent organization or any other way in Indiana? Still he must not altogether late as is recorded that he sent one of his hired men to make a federal affidavit that his legal residence was in Indianapolis, just preceding a federal election, and when everybody knew was a resident of Lake Forest, Illinois.

Did you ever hear a man, who child tell of a kind act on the part of Delavan Smith or his newspaper did—once. His whole force of ployes was sent out to tell about five of the men employed by the newspaper told me the same within a week, so they must either been well trained or he was true. He had given away but one time. I would tell you about but do not want to add to the millation of the young man and family who received the $50. Any who doubts that he gave away much money can probably verify story by writing Delavan Smith, Lake Forest, Illinois.

Here is a story worth while has never before been published of the biggest newspapers of country sent a staff of a dozen reporters to Indiana to "tear Taggart to tatters." This was to give him for his loyal support of 1908. That staff of earnest, young men worked for six weeks under an able leader and with local assistance. They investigated the business, political and personal record of Thos Taggart from the he started with nothing but a going carefully through his records three times mayor of Indianapolis, twice auditor of Marion county, all his record after that time. His work was most thorough with no expense, going over the ground Delavan Smith and his eye had traversed many times.

Then leaving Indianapolis in charge of that campaign, who knew well, came to me and said had "never found a cleaner record any man as an individual, as an employer, as receiver for large properties, as a business man, and as a citizen and deservedly popular citizen, as we have found in the record of Taggart. We came expecting to find corruption of the worst sort. In more than thirty years of newspapering investigating such things I have never found a cleaner record in respects."

And this is the sort of men Delavan Smith and his kind "utterly destroy." And the institutions which they contract he destroy because the builder has temerity to go ahead and construct with no building permit from Delavan Smith or his newspaper.

Out upon this definition of "freedom of the press" which means a right of an unscrupulous threats utter destruction or promises of alling political preferment, to drive the do the bidding of a vicious newspaper owner who does not even within the state, federal affidavits the contrary notwithstanding. How long already, and in too many conspicuous instances have the ears of governors and others been held to ground listening for sounds from the office of Delavan Smith, and at the proper signal have these gone out to assassinate the characters of men, women and children who would bow to the domination of Delavan Smith of Lake Forest, Illinois.
