HOLMES KNOWN AS COOK

HE RENTED THE HOUSE OCTOBER 5 AND REMAINED SEVERAL DAYS.

Alivet Mooreman's Conversation with the Murderer-Holmes's Furniture Still Remains in the Suburb.

Yesterday morning in the quiet suburb of Irvington, five miles east of the city, was found a house which beyond doubt was occupied by H. H. Holmes during last October.

During the afternoon charred pieces of human bones were found in the chimney, which has a foundation in the cellar. There is no doubt in the mind of detective Frank Geyer, of Philadelphia, who has worked so untiringly upon the Holmes case for eight months and more, that he has found all that remains of Howard Pietzel and at the same time obtained good evidence that the boy was murdered and disposed of in this city. The name which Holmes gave in renting the house was A. E. Cook, the same name he used in Cincinnati. The exact time of the murder was all that remained to be learned last night.

Elivet Mooreman, a student at Butler University, talked with the man who rented the cottage and he positively identifies the photograph of Holmes as that of the mysterious individual who came to the place one day in October with a boy, remaining there but one or two days. Holmes rented the house Oct. 5. Among the ashes found in the chimney were sections of a human skull, teeth, several vertebrae, portions of ribs, buttons and other things indicating foul play, which give traces of the only victim of the human butcher unaccounted for.

Inspector Gary, of the Fidelity Insurance Company, has been with detective Geyer upon his last visit to this city. They have been assisted by detective Richards, of the city detective force, and the three have searched from one end of the city to the other in an effort to learn something of Holmes and his actions in this city. Real estate offices have been visited and the owners of real estate questioned, but no tangible clues were obtained until yesterday morning. Many were the reports brought to Mr. Geyer and he faithfully investigated each. Inquiries have been made of suburban real estate men, but none reported a house as having been rented and occupied for a few days during last October. Mr. Geyer, after his investigations in other cities and the discovery of the evidences of Holmes's guilt, was convinced that Howard Pietzel was murdered and his remains buried in this city.

Mr. Geyer knew that Holmes, with the three Pietzel children, was in this city last October. He knew that he presumably departed upon the 6th, but in fact was seen here as late as the 10th. It has been his endeavor to find how and where he spent the intervening time. The discovery at Toronto strengthened the conclusions drawn by Mr. Geyer. He traced Holmes from this city to Toronto and learned that the wily swindler charged with a dozen murders did not lose much time in getting there. It was learned that Holmes arrived there with two little girls, having first stopped at their mother's, going so far as to dig their graves.

THE IRVINGTON CLEW.

The investigation at the Toronto house unearthed the two mutilated bodies of the Pietzel girls, but no trace of the boy, Howard, was found.

Howard, was found, neither could it be proved that he had the boy with him either there or at Detroit. Indianapolis was the last place where the boy was seen, so Mr. Geyer returned here a month ago, making the Spencer House his headquarters and letting it be known that he was searching for a house rented under suspicious circumstances last October.

At times he was on the point of giving up and allowing the disappearance of the boy to remain a mystery with the explanation that Holmes had so well covered his tracks in murdering the boy that they could not be found. He persevered, however, and can now return to Philadelphia with evidence much the same in character as has been accumulated against Holmes in the management of the famous Chicago case, where many persons met their death at his hands.

The story and a half house at Irvington where the discoveries of yesterday were made stands some little distance from Union avenue, in the extreme eastern part of the suburb. Across the street is the Methodist church, and two hundred yards to the south are the Pennsylvania railroad tracks. There is no other house in the immediate neighborhood, for the cottage stands in a secluded place. To the west is a small grove of young catalpa trees. To the east there is a large common. There are two roads leading to the street-car line. It is such a place as Holmes would seek for a crime, suggesting the neighborhoods in which he rented houses in Detroit and Toronto. Several persons in the suburb recall the strange actions of the man who rented the house last October, and to Elivet Mooreman these actions were suggestive of those of Holmes.

He was on the point of notifying Mr. Geyer of what he knew some time ago, but the fear of notoriety deterred him. There was considerable talk, however, and reports reached the ears of Mr. Geyer. Monday night the three men who have been most active in the case were talking together regarding what new step was to be taken. Mr. Geyer asked Richards about Irvington, and the result was that a trip was made to the suburb yesterday morning.

An inquiry was first made of Charles Brouse, a real estate dealer, who has an office near the railroad station of the suburb. Mr. Indiana, however, Mr. Brouse was recalled that some time last fall the Union-avenue property was rented to a stranger who occupied it but a few days and then departed, leaving behind some furniture. Mr. Geyer took a look at the house and began to make further inquiries regarding its ownership and occupants in the last year.

He learned that the house was built by Dr. T. L. Thompson three years ago for a home. Last September the doctor moved out, and the next month it was rented by a man answering the description of Holmes. In the spring of 1895 the family of Edward Brennan, who lived there but two months, occupied it. Since then the Brennan family moved away the house has been vacant. Dr. Thompson sold the property to George W. Lancaster, living near Mapleton, who owned it at the time Holmes rented it. Mr. Lancaster has since sold the property to H. R. Miles.

SEARCHING THE CELLAR.

Mr. Geyer lost little time in beginning a search of the premises for the body of Howard Pietzel. It was about 10 o'clock when the work was commenced. The cellar was first examined. One portion of it is cemented, as Dr. Thompson expected some time to add to the house, and this cellar he proposed to use as a laundry. There are six rooms to the house, counting one open room in the rear, which is used as a kitchen. Adjoining the cemented floor is a low cellar, which Mr. Geyer at first thought might have furnished a grave for the lad.

The ground was hard, however, and there was no evidence. The prospect of an exciting battle has attracted to Harrisburg many of the roughest element from the larger cities, and trouble is looked for, although up to midnight there has been nothing more serious than an occasional fist fight.
