My saint. As I name her I fancy you thinking of some goddess who fell, easily and far. Who bears her crown, white wearing fall gently.

THE REPORTER-DETECTIVE. (Hercules Townsend is the Knight.) When old James Felton, the rich leather merchant, a widower, had three grown-up children, returned from the three months' trip to Europe, which constituted the first relaxation from business cares he had allowed himself during his long and busy life, his sons and daughters were indignant, and his friends wringed their hands sorrowfully and talked of more elaborate funerals.

On the afternoon of February 12, 1888, a fine, bright winter day, she drove up to the door of the flat and stepped out of her brougham with all the sprightliness and buoyancy of a girl twenty years of age. She looked older indeed than twenty, as all bunched up in furs, she turned to give some final directions to the coachman concerning the flat at which he was to call and she set out that evening. Her husband was likely to be detained in town rather late and had promised to meet her at Delmonico's in time to dine, and afterwards to take her to the theater. She entered the house and ran rapidly up the stairs to the front door, where their flat was situated, and found her maid Charlotte already standing there, with the door open.

It was growing dark when Charlotte returned, frightened in advance at the reproof she knew she deserved at her mistress's hands. She sat herself in the front door with her latch key, and a few seconds afterward had softly entered the flat. A peep into the drawing room somewhat reassured her. Her absence had as yet not been detected, for she could see the outline of Mrs. Felton's form as she peacefully dozed on the sofa, in front of the fire, which threw a flickering red glow on her face. So, so, indeed, was the glow that the girl was struck by its intensity and glanced curiously at the fire. To her surprise it was nearly out. Strange how the dull embers could cast so strong a glare. She stepped forward gently and peered into her mistress's face, and then with a succession of piercing shrieks, which aroused the attention of all the household, she rushed into the passage and down the stairs. Mrs. Felton lay on the lounge cold in death, with a wound in her forehead, from which trickled, drop by drop, till it formed a dark pool on the bright Eastern rug beneath, a stream of slowly darkening blood.

paper circles is known as a "clean beat" on its contemporaries. For this Nugent was to be thanked, and when he turned up at noon on the following day he was warmly greeted by the new Indianapolis editor, who said: "I'll give you charge of the whole case, Nugent," said he. "I don't believe in your murder theory, but if you can work it out and discover the murderer, your reputation as a newspaper man will be made, and you can command a big salary from any paper in town."

But Nugent did not stop here. He seemed to have given himself up utterly to the case, and hardly slept or ate while his investigations were in progress. He prevailed on the editor of the Chronicle to let him read the record of the dead woman and her former husband, the Rev. Lewis Stanfield. This produced a remarkable reply from the editor, who said: "I have looked the world through the Chronicle. Although the insurance company had paid the policy held by Mrs. Stanfield, they had not laid aside a suspicion which had prompted them to retain the editor local in the business of their inquiries since, and had proved definitely that the reverend swindler had never died, but had, with his wife, concocted the ingenious plot which had enriched her, and they supposed to be dead."

On the morning of February 12, 1888, every paper in the Union contained the story of the shocking death of Mrs. Felton, the wife of one of New York's prominent merchants, and the Indianapolis papers made it the leading news article of the day, and devoted columns space to it. Nowhere, however, was there to be found such a picturesque and graphic account as in the Daily Chronicle. It was the way that the editor, who was a particularist, instead of following the lead of the police, who, anxious to save themselves trouble, insisted that it was a case of suicide, the Chronicle suggested that the case was probably a case of murder. The circumstances, as condensed from all the lurid accounts, was as follows: The dead woman was found by the police lying on her left side, with her face toward the fire-place, and in this position, according to the dead woman's husband, she was accustomed to keep a dainty toy revolver, which now was missing. The police easily explained this apparent contradiction of their theory by the fact that the revolver had been kicked into the corner of the room in the confusion attendant on the discovery of the body, and had later been abstracted by one of the many girls who were the neighbors of the murdered woman in the first few hours. The skin on the forehead of the unfortunate woman was scorched and blackened with powder, showing that the pistol must have been pressed close to the face when discharged. It was not only the bold assumption of an apparently popular theory, however, which drew general attention to the Chronicle's article, it was the interesting account of the death of Mrs. Felton that caused the paper to be eagerly bought.

When Mrs. Felton first met the murdered woman, standing in this story, her name was Mrs. Stanfield, and she was the wife of a clergyman who had returned from England who had been deprived of his living in consequence of a grave breach of his duties toward an orphan of whose property he was trustee, and who had been had embroiled in a quarrel with a woman, and whose death it was discovered that his wife was insured for a comparatively large sum of money which his widow only obtained after a prolonged legal contest with the trustees. Various other interesting details were given, and the Chronicle gloried in having obtained what in news-rent for arrest," he murmured. "Description of person." Records in insurance case. "Ah, here we have it!" Photograph of Mrs. Stanfield, taken in 1884. And he handed a cabinet portrait to the reporter. The editor took it, eagerly gave one glance at it, and with a deep "My God!" which made the little detective jump, he let it drop upon his desk. His eye fell on Nugent's letter, and he hastily rose to open it. This is what he read:

As he finished reading this extraordinary letter, the editor looked at the business detective's face over his shoulder. He had evidently followed every word of it. "That's a new law all over," he said, calmly. "Now, sir, take my advice. Say nothing more about this case. It is a matter of the highest importance in England and report to the insurance company whose servant I am, and let the clever police 'ere keep a lookin' out for Stanfield." And the editor took his advice. Nugent's letter which had been written on the morning of the murder and put aside as of no consequence, which was clearly written by Stanfield, and which stated that he had been in the city of Mrs. Felton, at 4 o'clock of the afternoon of February 11, or within an hour of the time at which the woman must have breathed her last. This settled the matter. The police for once had not explored the records of other papers ever followed the lead of the Chronicle, and helped to voice the general cry: "It is Rev. Lewis Stanfield, the murderer!"

By the time Nugent was almost a public character. Seldom has a reporter found himself in a position so notorious. He was the subject of countless editorials, all having for the text the utility of the press as the guardian of the public interest. He was a doer. His fellows of the Press Club gave him an informal banquet, and he proved himself equal to the occasion. He had been nicknamed "the taciturn bloomer" into a clever and humorous speech he made at the dinner, and by turns sarcastic, pathetic and humorous. His face lost the consumptive look, and he began to be almost loquacious in his dress—his wife once more was a woman of the world. And all this was the result of brains and hard work.

A week had passed, and the great Felton murder mystery was, as regards the personality of the murderer, a mystery still. The Indianapolis News was taking advantage of a vacation from his detective duties, and was enjoying his well earned leisure in that manner as pleased him best. The coroner's inquest on the dead woman will stand adjourned for the police bureau, and were round to the popular view of things, kept interest alive by every day declaring that they had obtained fresh clues to the whereabouts of Stanfield. Walter Proudfoot was somewhat nervous, and he was particularly so at the arrival of the last ocean steamer, which was to bring the means of identifying the murderer, and he had the presentiment that by these the mystery would eventually be solved. All events turned out as he predicted. The steamer material in it, for his journalistic instinct told him that he would be able to publish a likeness in his columns which would increase the paper's sale ten fold. He had not seen Nugent for nearly a week, but he knew that he was looking for the steamer's arrival, and had made arrangements to have a telegram sent him when it should be sighted at Sandy Hook.

As he finished reading this extraordinary letter, the editor looked at the business detective's face over his shoulder. He had evidently followed every word of it. "That's a new law all over," he said, calmly. "Now, sir, take my advice. Say nothing more about this case. It is a matter of the highest importance in England and report to the insurance company whose servant I am, and let the clever police 'ere keep a lookin' out for Stanfield." And the editor took his advice. Nugent's letter which had been written on the morning of the murder and put aside as of no consequence, which was clearly written by Stanfield, and which stated that he had been in the city of Mrs. Felton, at 4 o'clock of the afternoon of February 11, or within an hour of the time at which the woman must have breathed her last. This settled the matter. The police for once had not explored the records of other papers ever followed the lead of the Chronicle, and helped to voice the general cry: "It is Rev. Lewis Stanfield, the murderer!"

By the time Nugent was almost a public character. Seldom has a reporter found himself in a position so notorious. He was the subject of countless editorials, all having for the text the utility of the press as the guardian of the public interest. He was a doer. His fellows of the Press Club gave him an informal banquet, and he proved himself equal to the occasion. He had been nicknamed "the taciturn bloomer" into a clever and humorous speech he made at the dinner, and by turns sarcastic, pathetic and humorous. His face lost the consumptive look, and he began to be almost loquacious in his dress—his wife once more was a woman of the world. And all this was the result of brains and hard work.

A week had passed, and the great Felton murder mystery was, as regards the personality of the murderer, a mystery still. The Indianapolis News was taking advantage of a vacation from his detective duties, and was enjoying his well earned leisure in that manner as pleased him best. The coroner's inquest on the dead woman will stand adjourned for the police bureau, and were round to the popular view of things, kept interest alive by every day declaring that they had obtained fresh clues to the whereabouts of Stanfield. Walter Proudfoot was somewhat nervous, and he was particularly so at the arrival of the last ocean steamer, which was to bring the means of identifying the murderer, and he had the presentiment that by these the mystery would eventually be solved. All events turned out as he predicted. The steamer material in it, for his journalistic instinct told him that he would be able to publish a likeness in his columns which would increase the paper's sale ten fold. He had not seen Nugent for nearly a week, but he knew that he was looking for the steamer's arrival, and had made arrangements to have a telegram sent him when it should be sighted at Sandy Hook.

As he finished reading this extraordinary letter, the editor looked at the business detective's face over his shoulder. He had evidently followed every word of it. "That's a new law all over," he said, calmly. "Now, sir, take my advice. Say nothing more about this case. It is a matter of the highest importance in England and report to the insurance company whose servant I am, and let the clever police 'ere keep a lookin' out for Stanfield." And the editor took his advice. Nugent's letter which had been written on the morning of the murder and put aside as of no consequence, which was clearly written by Stanfield, and which stated that he had been in the city of Mrs. Felton, at 4 o'clock of the afternoon of February 11, or within an hour of the time at which the woman must have breathed her last. This settled the matter. The police for once had not explored the records of other papers ever followed the lead of the Chronicle, and helped to voice the general cry: "It is Rev. Lewis Stanfield, the murderer!"

CITY CLEANINGS.

Isaac M. Nodan is seeking a divorce from Mary Seaman. Chapman Post, G. A. R., will have a campfire this evening.

There were thirty-three deaths and fifty-five births reported to the Health Board during the past week.

Chris. Brink, Recorder-elect Marion County, has filed his bond, with Albert Gall, Fred Rank and Louis Hays as sureties.

Samuel Corder, of Haughville, while attempting to stop a runaway team yesterday, was knocked down and had his arm broken.

The Sunday-school of the Second-Prebyterian Church has been changed to 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, commencing to-morrow.

Pleasant Jester, residing 412 West Washington street, and employed at Van Camp & Co.'s packing house, was overpowered by heat yesterday.

The Woman's Auxiliary to the Y. M. C. A. will meet on Monday afternoon, September 10, at 2:30 o'clock. Business of importance. A full attendance is desired.

Early yesterday morning two men were discovered trying to break into George A. Reese's saloon, 174 East Washington street, and two shots were fired at them without effect.

The property-holders on South Meridian street are clamoring for the Street Commissioner, claiming that he has not cleaned the gutters south of Morris street in more than two years.

Thursday night thieves raided the fruit orchard of Mr. Thompson, a mile east of the Belt, on the Blair Road, taking away about ten bushels of fine pears and a hundred pounds of grapes.

A great many chickens were stolen from him. There will be a union meeting of the Presbyterian churches to-morrow evening with the First Baptist, in the interest of the Commercial Travelers, the same to be held at the Tabernacle Church.

An address will be delivered by Samuel N. Haines, President of the Commercial Temperance League, his theme, "Lead a Hand."

WATER WORKS INVESTIGATION.

The Health Board Claims to Have Developed Some Astonishing Evidence.

The Health Board will submit the result of its Water Works investigation at the meeting of the Council one week hence, and, according to Dr. Earp, Secretary, some "astounding results" have already been developed.

Dr. Earp is quoted with saying that, while "I am not a man who would attempt to stir up public sentiment, this thing is awful." Within the past few days the Board has secured testimony very damaging to the Company, the most important of which comes from three employes, Samuel Hodde, Mr. Rankin and Samuel Vannoy, assistant engineers at the power house.

These witnesses are quoted as saying that, prior to the beginning of the investigation, it was the practice to open the valve connected with the flume whenever high pressure was demanded, thereby letting in the water from the canal direct to the main tank. They also testified that the other two witnesses, and says that it was a common occurrence to turn on the water from the canal whenever the water in the well ran low, even when there was no call for the pressure.

Evidence was also had from the men at the open gallery that a great deal of the supply came from the river through the filter. Yesterday copies of this testimony from the employes, which had been submitted in affidavit form, were supplied to the company, at their request, and the witnesses have been summoned to appear before the Water Company Board on Monday in connection therewith.

It is interesting to note how frequently water from the canal has been supplied to the mains, as the valve attached to the main leading to the flume was merely a plaything to the men, and it was turned on unconsciously as they ate their dinner.

An analysis has also been ordered by the Board, samples of the water having been sent to Charles O. Curtman, of St. Louis, Professor of Chemistry in the Medical College, and another set of work on "Drinking Water," and Professor Henry Lehmann, chemist, of Philadelphia.

One sample was taken from the hydrant in the Woodruff drug store, and the other from the Meridian Church. Both Dr. Earp states that the analysis will differ materially from those shown by the company within the past year. Among the plans suggested by Dr. Earp—and it has been before quoted by the Board—is to place a valve connecting with the flume under seal and under surveillance of the Board of Health, and the Board to make semi-weekly inspection of the works. He does not know of any better plan than this to guard against an impure supply in the future.

Religious Services To-morrow. The morning and evening services at the Friends Church will be led by Evangelist Robert Douglas.

The pulp of the Central Christian Church will be occupied by Rev. D. R. Luther, of Des Moines, Ia.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the First, Second and Seventh Presbyterian Churches will hold their regular weekly meetings in their respective churches, the First and Second at 6:30 p. m. and the Seventh at 3:30 p. m.

There will be no services in the First Presbyterian Church to-morrow, on account of repairs which are being made.

There will be a song service held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall at 4:30 p. m. for young men.

Fourth and Last Day's Races. The Indiana Trotting and Pacing Association has closed a successful meeting. The last races of the series yesterday were well patronized. The sport was not as exciting as on the previous day, but was entertaining.

The summary of the 2:30 race (pacer) for the four-hundred-dollar purse is as follows: Clinton..... 1 1 2 1 Helen Gourde..... 2 2 3 4 Fore W..... 2 2 3 4 Van Esley..... 4 4 4 4 Time—2:29 1/2.

There was a trotting race, foals of 1885, in which Grace Lee took three straight heats; Keller Tom, second; Tom Lindsay, third. Best time, 2:35 1/2.

Declared Insane. George Williams, of Center Township, has been declared insane, he being subject to the wildest delusions. Mrs. Minnie Krugman, aged seventy-two, has also been placed in custody. Some years ago she was declared insane, her delusion being that some one wanted to rob her, and Joe Schlow was appointed guardian. At that time she had secured money and articles of value in her clothing. After a short term in the insane asylum she secured release under writ of habeas corpus, and went to Cincinnati, where she remained until recently. Her vagaries have given her family great trouble.

Flumbers Overrun With Work. The plumbers are overrun with work, owing to the demand for natural gas, and last evening one of the "bosses" remarked that he had so many orders ahead that he could no longer give attention to soliciting jobs, nor would he take the time to make estimates on contracts which might come in. He also said that he had telegraphed to various points for twenty-five additional journeyman plumbers, but so far he had been unable to secure additional help.

THE TABLE OF THE SICKERS.

A voracious Octopus had his den hard by the mouth of a Cove through which the Fishes went for Food, and as they passed that Way many of them were seized and Devoured. Seeing that they were being exterminated, the Fishes had a Town Meeting and resolved that they would no longer go by the Den of the Octopus, but would seek their Food by a Path beyond his Reach.

The Octopus, who had waxed fat on the Fishes, soon began to grow thin and dwindle away, so much so that he feared he would perish. Hoping that the new Path would in time be closed up, the Octopus began to devise Means by which he could keep alive, until the Fishes should be compelled to come by his Den again. And so, to lure some of the Fishes within his reach, he set up a Lamentation, crying aloud so as could hear him: "Come and look upon my Distress, kind-hearted Fishes; lo! I am reduced Thirty Per Cent. No harm shall come to you."

The wise Fishes, knowing the Octopus of old, stayed away from him, and his Lamentation, moved by Sympathy and Curiosity, returned within his Reach and were speedily devoured.

Moral: "Do not be Deceived." Put in the Best When You Pipe. It will pay you to see us before you pipe your house. Why? Because people are coming to us every day who have piped their houses with other safety appliances, and buy the Knickerbocker Regulator and cut-outs, and throw their old cut-outs away.

We claim to have the best regulator, and the most positive cut-off made, and ask you to call and see for yourself. The only regulator that will successfully handle natural gas for illuminating, no rubber valves to stick, and will not rust. All cut-offers are invited to call. Manufactured only by the Knickerbocker Regulator Company, No. 13 Vance Block, Indianapolis, Ind.

The Geo. H. Chapman, ROBERT ANDERSON, JNO. P. RUCKLE AND GRO. H. THOMAS POST, G. A. R., Will leave here at 11 a. m., Monday, via the I. B. & W. route for the National Encampment at Columbus, O. RELIABLE PLUMBING. Parties desiring their houses piped for natural gas should be cautious to place their orders in responsible hands. A guarantee from irresponsible persons is valueless if recourse can not be had in case of defective work; therefore, place our orders with staunch firms, such as represented by George W. Keyser, 89 North Illinois street. His work done in this city and vicinity is classed as the best in the country. His job in the Bates House recently finished creates the highest praise, and is not known to have ever been equaled. To give a list of the houses fitted up for the use of natural gas this year in this city would be too tedious to name. Suffice it to say that it all gives the best of satisfaction and leaves no room whatever for complaint. Mr. Keyser superintends all of his work in person, and gives all orders prompt and careful attention.
