THE LAW AND ITS EXECUTION
To debate which is the more guilty in refusing to uphold the law, the mayor or the sheriff, is small business, independent of the waste of effort, which it would be, and at this stage of the development it would be idle, indeed, we may indeed, accept any one's view of it who is in the moment the view of the case discretion in a part of the sheriff's jurisdiction.

THE "FILLED CHEESE" BILL
The solid opposition of the Democrats to the passage of the "filled cheese" bill by the House of Representatives is easily understood, for it is consistent with the Democratic theory of government. It is, in general principles, unwise to use the taxing power for any other purpose than that of raising money for the support of the Government.

The Hopkins hat is a new and original design in hats, and is made of the finest quality of material. It is a perfect model of simplicity and elegance, and is well adapted for all seasons.

THE SALVATION ARMY SCHEM
The statement which Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth have made in explanation of their withdrawal from the Salvation Army can not fail to strengthen their position with the American people. They insist that they were willing to obey the orders of General Booth directing them to leave this country, but that at the time the order to leave was received the strained political relations between the United States and England, and the fact that General Booth had not communicated with the Ballington Booths for six months, made it in the opinion of the latter, impolitic to relinquish the command.

THE KENTUCKY PLAN
There are signs which indicate that the Democratic State convention of Alabama, which meets April 21, will follow the unfortunate Kentucky precedent, and nominate a free silver ticket on a sound money platform. It is said that a majority of the delegates are for the free silver candidate, though this same majority will probably adopt a sound money platform and endorse the Cleveland administration. There will probably be several attempts of this kind to carry water on both shoulders, and it is possible that some of these attempts may succeed. Yet, in view of what happened in Kentucky, one would think that the politicians would be a little chary about repeating the experiment.

There can be no doubt that the people are thoroughly in earnest in regard to the money question. What they want, above all things, is a decision, one way or the other. They are not nearly so much interested in the success of a certain political party as they are in knowing whether this country is going to maintain the gold standard or to sink to the silver level. The issue is so sharp and clearly defined that there is no desire in any quarter for a compromise. Silver men and gold men alike want the matter settled.

purely family side of this trouble is still obscure. If some of the other relatives were jealous of the success of the Hallington Booths and wanted to have them transferred to another station in the interest of discipline, it is public not permitted to know it. General Booth himself seems to have feared that his chiefs in this country were being spoiled by their success. But it would seem better to view vanity born of success with toleration, rather than to create a break in a useful organization by driving out two of its most efficient and talented members.

Another Pretender in France.
London Spectator.
France, it is said, has yet another pretender. The son of the Duc de Chartres, Prince Henry of Orleans, has recently attracted much attention among monarchists as the ablest, or at least the most attractive, among the Bourbon princes. He has achieved a reputation as an explorer in Indo-China and Tibet, and recently was presented with the gold medal of the French Geographical Society. He was thereupon, as is customary, offered the Cross of the Legion of Honor, which, to the surprise of many Frenchmen, he accepted, calling at the same time, as etiquette demands, upon the president of the republic. At a dinner given in his honor, the prince observed that he remembered two counsels given by his grandfather, the Duc d'Orleans, in his will to be "the passionate servant of the revolution, and to manage to get forgiven for being a prince." He thought he had achieved that forgiveness. It is said that all that remains of Bourbonism gathers round the prince, that he is rapidly forming a party, and that his idea is to be elected president of the republic, and then what fate shall befall him. His political ideas nothing is yet exactly known, except that he professes to believe strongly in colonial expansion for France, and to be unusually hostile to Great Britain. There is no evidence yet that he is a strong man, though he is a brave and enterprising one; but his desire to play the part of "Phillipe Egalite" seems to be unmistakable. The house of Orleans, say the Legationists, was a man of letters and a poet, naturally produces traitors.

FOUR DISTINCT TYPES FOUND ONLY IN UNCLE SAM'S NAVY.

No Other Nation Has Anything Like the Monitor, the Ram, the Dynamite Cruiser or the Holland Submarine Torpedo Boat.

Copyright, 1896, by R. S. McClure, Limited.

English naval experts have not only acknowledged publicly in recent years that the quality of the new navy of the United States is better than that of any afloat, but they have declared that all nations must look to this country for decided advances in the art of naval warfare.

Whatever may come of this expectation it is not known generally that already this country has four types of vessels not possessed by other nations.

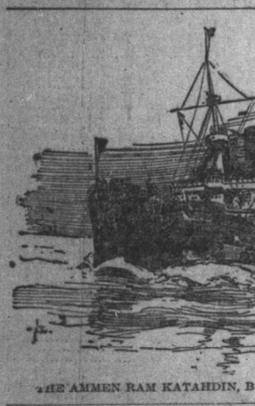

THE HOLLAND SUBMARINE BOAT RAMMING THE ENEMY UNDER THE WATER.

These types are: The monitor type of battleship, the best example of which is the Puritan soon to go into commission.

Although the monitor type of warships is nearly thirty years old, and its success is beyond dispute, other nations have been content to let it remain an American type, for which, of course, there is a reason.

That probably is that monitors are good for defensive purposes, chiefly, as monitors have never been used as offensive vessels.

THE AMMEN RAM KATAKADIN, BATTLESHIP, ROYAL OAK CLASS.

Finest fighting machine afloat. She will have four guns of 12-inch bore, which is next to the largest size available for use on vessels.

that their time had come. They would not give up, however, and found that they could maintain steerage way with the antiquated machinery, and that they would live if the force of the sea did not start the rivets and open up the ship.

So-called Dynamite Cruiser. There can be no doubt that there has been so much opposition to the so-called dynamite cruiser Vesuvius that many persons view her with suspicion.

New Submarine Torpedo Boat. It is only within a short time that it became generally known that this country was building a submarine torpedo boat and that within a year the craft would probably be in service.

use of these explosives suggests, is not to their liking. There can be no doubt as to the success of the "dynamite" guns on land, but why the Government should reject their use on a moving platform, simply because they are not as effective as a stationary platform, has not been explained.

The ram Katakadin does not rest on speculation merely as to its value, but on the fact of the Victoria's collision with the ram of the Camperdown in the Mediterranean sea three years ago.

ROSE KINGSLEY'S ART LECTURES.

Subjects That She Will Discuss at the Propylaeum.

Under the auspices of the Indianapolis Art Association Miss Rose Kingsley, daughter of the French Academy, daughter of the late Rev. Charles Kingsley, will deliver four lectures at the Propylaeum. The dates are Thursday, April 16; Tuesday, April 21; Friday, April 24, and Saturday, April 25. The first three lectures in the series will be on "French Pictures and Painting," the last on "Shakespeare in Warwickshire." These four lectures will be given in the Propylaeum, 125 North New York street.

The second lecture, which deals with the decorative patterns, contains a review of the work of Courbet, J. F. Millet, J. Bastien-Lepage, Leon Lhermitte and Jules Breton. She begins with the study of art and a discussion of what is true "realism." She speaks of Gustave Courbet, J. F. Millet, Bastien-Lepage and their followers of Courbet, Millet and Bastien-Lepage and what they have accomplished.

The third lecture, on "Portrait, Decorative and Religious Painters: the Impressionists," carries further the idea of truth in art, expounding in the former lecture. She discusses the work of Carl Gustave Duran, Bonnat, Delaunay, Paul Baudry, Puvis de Chavannes, Tissot, Edouard Dufour, Cazin, Manet, Degas, Claude Monet, Renoir, Besnard, Sisley, Pissarro and Aman-Jean. Miss Kingsley discusses the influence of Japanese art in the Impressionist, especially as shown in the work of Claude Monet. Her summary up to the whole question is that the search for truth, the love of liberty, are the great characteristics of French artists in the nineteenth century.

Of the last lecture, "Shakespeare in Warwickshire," Miss Kingsley says: "We lived at Eversley until my father died, and then we went to Warwickshire to make a home for my younger brother who was farming there. We lived there twelve years, occupying a lovely old manor house, built in the reign of Henry seven, about two miles south of Lichfield and Warwick, and ten miles from Stratford-on-Avon. I found myself in a Shakespearean country, with the little boys in the village streets using Shakespeare's words perfectly new to me, and the south country women. This set me to work on Shakespearean localisms, and I found that the names of the people, and places, and fruits, and flowers were all Shakespearean words, and that there were actually many allusions to local matters in the place, and to traditions and contemporary events."

A syllabus of the lecture is as follows: "Subjects of early surroundings on the art work; this fact hitherto neglected in the case of Shakespeare. How to study Shakespeare in his native country. Three sources from which we may obtain knowledge of Shakespeare, the Warwickshire man."

IRVINGTON "CITIZENS" TICKET.

Nominations Made in the Suburbs Saturday Night. For several weeks Irvington citizens have been kept busy attending to municipal affairs. Immediately following the electric light question, and almost overshadowed by it, came the primaries to nominate candidates for the town election. The Republicans met in the Commercial Club Hall and nominated a straight party ticket. Saturday night the hall was again filled, in response to a call to the "citizens" of Irvington to nominate for the town offices men who were "best qualified for the positions, regardless of party principles."

Women and the School Board.

To the Editor of The Indianapolis News: I am glad to see that some of our woman's clubs are instructing their delegates to the local council to vote and labor against the proposed running of women candidates for school commissioner in the coming election.

I have never been active as a suffragist, and see no reason why women should not be as well satisfied with their present status as men should be with theirs.

status as men should be with theirs. I look, however, upon good women as the comrades of good men—as their co-workers in all useful and pleasant work, and expect the time is not far distant when this growing comradeship and reciprocity of duties will be recognized in our municipal life as it now is, thank God, in our family life. Until this time, unless we can help in municipal affairs naturally, in a place where we are wanted and expected, it seems to me that both the patience of wisdom and the wisdom of patience would teach us to wait. Meanwhile, the manner and the outcome of the school commissioners made it perfectly apparent that the women know a little of their country. And, while the latter may be unknown to some, the former is well known to all. Friends before we succeed. Some years of quiet study, such as English women, we organize for office, even of the most useful nature. Yours truly, MRS. E. C. ATKINS.

SABBATARIANS AND GOLFERS.

A Marked Increase in Playing Outdoor Games in England.

London Cable New York Sun. Strict Sabbatarians have been having a rather bad time in this country lately, and their various organizations, which, though numerically weak, are strong in funds, owing to the generous benefactions of pious supporters, are considering whether it will not be well to hold a great mass meeting of protest in London and arrange a monster petition to Parliament. The Sabbatarians have reason for their sorrow, seeing that even the government is setting a pernicious example by opening national museums and art galleries on Sunday, and the public is condoning the sin by flocking thereto, to the detriment of chapels, taverns, parsons and liquor-sellers.

Concurrently, there is a marked increase in the dreadful habit of playing golf and other outdoor games on the Sabbath, and here again the wicked influence of those in high places is apparent. For Mr. Bullock, the leader in the House of Commons, is a notorious and defiant Sunday golfer, and Sir John Gorst and other members of the executive are known to ride bicycles on the Lord's Day. Scotland, as might have been expected, has taken the lead in this movement of protest, and Sabbath breakers have been denounced at the church assemblies and public meetings galore, not without occasional skirmishes with the sinners and the breaking of heads. The church gatherings, naturally, have been unanimous and decorous, but at the public meetings Satan has been allowed to obtrude himself with amendments extolling "Sunday golf without lazar," and such like evasions of the true issue.

The Sabbatarians have been denounced as Pharisees, but this is obviously slander, for all their meetings begin with prayer and singing the One Hundredth psalm, which, so to speak, is a guarantee of good faith. The pressure is likely to extend before long. The Lord's Day Observance Association has its eye upon public opinion, which is becoming more and more addicted to Sunday bicycling and garden parties; and the wicker workmen, who are huddled together to break the law by shaving on Sunday mornings, when the latter doubts whether to go to church, or to the former ought to be compelled to go. This association promises to make no distinction between rich and poor offenders, but it may be predicted with absolute certainty that the wicker workmen will be hounded, while workmen will be harried, which is the way of Sabbatarians everywhere, as elsewhere. In point of material, make and finish, holds an "ideal" for the best tastes, and no gentleman need fail in finding the style to suit him. The assortment in men's shoes at Mr. Marrot's is the most complete selection of the art of the low.

Our Extraordinary Congress.

London Cable New York Times. If our Congress at Washington enjoyed universal esteem here for wisdom, sobriety and sincere good faith, it would probably do poor Mrs. Maybrick more harm than good by interfering in her case, but the present body has come to mean nothing in the European imagination, and is a thing that is silly, vulgar, and dishonest. Indeed, Europeans have managed to preserve respect for the American people as a whole only by believing that the wretchedly misrepresented by this extraordinary Congress, Englishmen in particular hold this view, and use it as an argument in counseling the Spaniards to have patience, and they consequently feel like saying that the meddling of such a body in such a case is simply intolerable. I said at the time of the trial that the unfortunate woman was wrongfully convicted on the evidence, and putting the abstract question of moral guilt aside, believing that has come to be the feeling of a great majority of the people here. The present fiasco of the Olympian games is a case in point. It is suggested now in a vague way that England was hardly represented at all among the athletes, but I do not think that this is true. The Greeks brought their attention to the twenty-six-mile run from Marathon, which had the attraction of reproducing a historic feat that every Hellenic child knows as we know Paul Revere's ride, and they were in a frenzy of delight when three came in ahead of the Hungarian competitor, who followed at a respectable distance, brought the news that all the others had broken down half way.

The Olympic Games.

Speaking still of the London press, it is hard not to sympathize a little with the fiasco of the Olympian games from the point of view of the editors here. They are, as elsewhere, in a state of mind, but assume it is true in others, that the telegrams came all right and at great length, but consisted of such a monotonous, melancholy record of American triumphs that they were cut down to the barest skeleton. It is suggested now in a vague way that England was hardly represented at all among the athletes, but I do not think that this is true. The Greeks brought their attention to the twenty-six-mile run from Marathon, which had the attraction of reproducing a historic feat that every Hellenic child knows as we know Paul Revere's ride, and they were in a frenzy of delight when three came in ahead of the Hungarian competitor, who followed at a respectable distance, brought the news that all the others had broken down half way.

"Long Time Ago."

New York Sun. With the "frontier" fast disappearing, even in the furthest West, it seems a far cry back to the days of the frontier in the furthest East, but there are yet in Maine white people who are living links with those days. Mrs. Silvy Dow, who died in East Dover, Me., a few days ago, at the age of ninety-one years, was such a link. She was the fifth white child born in the East Dover, Me., a few days ago, at the age of ninety-one years, was such a link.
