

PLANTATION SONGS SUNG AT FUNERAL

Prominent Men in All Walks of Life Attend Booker T. Washington Burial.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Nov. 17.—Simplicity marked the funeral of Booker T. Washington, noted negro educator, race leader and author, which took place here this morning at the institution which he made famous and which has played such an important part in the elevation of the negro race. Fully 8,000 people came to Tuskegee to play the last tribute to respect to Dr. Washington, only 2,500 of whom could get into the chapel.

The line of march formed in front of the administration building, headed by the members of the board of trustees, who were present. Among them were William G. Wilcox of New York, W. W. Campbell and Charles W. Hare of Tuskegee, A. J. Wilborn, Tuskegee, William J. Schieffelin, New York, Belton Gilreath, Birmingham, Frank Trumbull, New York, Warren Logan, Tuskegee institute, and Victor H. Tulane, Montgomery. William H. Baldwin III., of New York city, also walked with the trustees. The trustees were followed by members of the faculty and the executive council of the school and a number of distinguished visitors, educators and students.

The simple episcopal service which was read was broken into only by the singing of old plantation songs which Dr. Washington loved so well and the reading of a few of the thousands of telegrams of condolence from all parts of the country. Prominent men in all walks of life, white as well as colored, attended the obsequies.

Among the most notable were Charles Banks, Mound Bayou, Miss., first vice president of the National Negro Business league; J. C. Napier, Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. R. H. Boyd, secretary National Baptist publishing board, Nashville, Tenn.; Ira T. Bryant, secretary A. M. E. Sunday school union, Nashville, Tenn.; W. H. Hale, president of A. & I. state normal school, Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. James B. Dudley, president A. & M. college, Greensboro, N. C.; Dr. Stephen H. Newman, president and George William Cook, secretary, Howard university, Washington, D. C.; Walter S. Buchanan, president A. & M. college, Normal, Ala.; John M. Wright, resident Kansas Educational Institute, Topeka, Kans.; H. E. Keating president Quindara college, Quindara, Kans.; Dr. Fayette A. McKenzie, president Fisk university, Nashville, Tenn.; Isaiah T. Montgomery, founder of Mound Bayou, Miss.

A Girl and a Man

By Annette Angert

An engagement—another man—a quarrel. Two lovers were separated because the girl fell desperately in love with the Other Man. The Man returned to his distant home, while the Girl allowed the Other to make passionate love to her. As the days and weeks rolled by, the Girl felt how lucky she was that she had met the Other in time. At times, however, he didn't seem to be the passionate lover he had been in the first few days. Neither knew whether he really had changed or whether he just seemed that way to the Girl. The Other told the Girl that he could never marry her, for he was pledged to someone else. Still he kept making love to her, and she kept hoping that sometime she might be able to have the Other, despite the someone else. Then the fiend incarnate, Jealousy, seemed to abide in the heart of the Girl. The Other began to make love to the Girl's chum. Now the Girl was very fond of the Chum, even as she was of the Other, so she was torn between Jealousy and love for them both. Of course, in her bitterness she blamed the Chum for trying to take the Other from her but it wasn't really the chum's fault for it was the Other who had started the love-making. The Chum, lonesome to be loved, had merely been too weak to resist the charms of the Other, for he was a very fascinating man. There came a time when the Other began to realize that he had played too far with the Girl. She really did care for him, while he, even though he did care in his way, had been plainly playing with her, for he was to marry someone else. Then he grew cool toward the Girl, and she worried over his coldness. Of course with Jealousy behind her, she blamed the Chum, never thinking of the Other's fiancée as the cause of the breach. Meanwhile the Man came again to see the Girl, and she, still loving the Other, refused finally to marry the Man. So the Man went back home once more, for he was broken-hearted over the Girl whom he loved better than life itself. His hopes and ambitions were gone, killed by the Girl, who has once said that she loved him and would marry him. And the Girl left him to his misery, while she longed for a returning warmth in the love that the Other gave to her. At times it seemed as though he were really giving her more of that old love. Then the Girl was happy, but not for long for she soon found that if she was receiving love from the Other, so was her Chum, and no girl wants to share the kisses of her lover with another girl. The Girl was at loss what to do, for she still loved both the Other and her Chum. Then came the day when the Other asked a special interview with the Girl. She was happy to grant it, but soon found that it was too be an unhappy ending to all her hopes. The

Other told her plainly that they could never be anything but friends, and that she had best forget him. The Girl was overwhelmed with grief for she really cared for the Other. She bade him good-by, however, promising not to write to him or see him as that would be the easiest way to forget him. The Girl brooded over the Other in silence for a short time, and listened with aching heart, while the Chum told her little things said and done by the Other. She realized that she had lost him forever, and her heart ached. There came a day when the Girl suddenly knew that she had been a mere passing fancy to the Other, and that when she had taken his attentions too seriously, he had felt it best to be rid of her. She realized that he may not have meant to hurt her, and he no doubt thought that she would play at love with him and not mean it. She knew then that she could never be happy with a man who would make love to her one day and her Chum the next; so she resolved that she would get over the ache, by just thinking of the Other as a dear friend and nothing more. About that time the Girl began to think of how she had treated the Man, who had gone home broken-hearted. Deep down in her heart she had always felt sorry for him, but she had tried to drown that feeling for she wanted to forget him. Now that she had given up all hope of the other, except as a friend, she thought she ought to try, if possible, to make up for what she had done to the Man.

So she wrote to the Man and told him she repented of all she had done to cause him sorrow, and that she would marry him and try to make him a good wife if he really wanted her, after the way she had acted. He, like the generous-hearted man that he was, answered that he had always loved her and had wanted her even after she had sent him away. He was more than glad to get her at all, for he had given up all hopes of ever having the Girl, whom he had always loved. When the Girl received the letter from the Man, telling her that he still wanted her, she was so happy that she cried. At last she was to have a chance to make up in happiness what she had caused him in sorrow. How glad she was that she had repented before it was too late.
