WILL BE UP TO TAXPAYERS

Date For Remonstrance On Proposed Transaction Is Set For September 23 By Councilmen

The proposed purchase of the local airport site by the City of Greencastle met the approval of the city council during its regular session Tuesday evening.

The site for the emergency landing field, approved by the government and which will soon be in condition for use, is located on the old Scott Browning farm, southeast of the city on the Mt. Meridian road.

An option on the tract of land for the airport drawn up by the Chamber of Commerce and the Prudential Insurance Company of America, owners of the farm, and a down payment receipt of $500 for the site, were presented to the council as a gift to the city by the local commercial organization.

Councilman John Cherry moved that the council purchase the airport, providing it was favored by the citizens of Greencastle. His motion was seconded by Councilman Ott Gardner.

According to Glen Lyon, city attorney, the airport can be purchased from the general fund, by bond issue, taxation, or by a gift.

CONCERT ON THURSDAY MAY BE LAST ONE

GREENCASTLE BAND NOT MAKING EXPENSES FOR WEEKLY PROGRAMS

NEED AT LEAST $40 WEEKLY

According to Band Officials The Collections Have Only Been Around $30 Each Week

Indications were Wednesday that the concert by the Greencastle Band on Thursday evening may be the last program of the present summer season.

According to Ray Trembley, director, and other officials of the organization, at least $40 weekly is necessary to finance the concerts here.

This sum pays the members of the band a small remuneration; rent on the hall where rehearsals are held; and pays for the music and other incidentals, including the erection and tearing down of the band stand.

So far this summer, less than $30 has been collected each week from the merchants in the business district, a difference of about $10, of the actual cost of putting on the concerts.

Unless the band boys are able to secure a little more money, it was believed quite probable that Thursday's entertainment will be the season's climax.

Another splendid program has been arranged for tomorrow night and no doubt another record crowd of music lovers will throng the public square during the evening.

- Thursday's program follows: 1. REPASZ BAND—March—C. C. Sweeley 2. MELODIES FROM "FAUST"—Gounod 3. ON THE SQUARE—March—F. A. Panella 4. UNDER A CIRCUS TENT—Overture—R. C. Jarrett 5. KITTY A CONTESTANT?

The question is, "What does a three-year-old kitten know about tree sitting contests?"

Some time ago, Nathaniel Macy, 210 N. Indiana street, erected a small platform in a large apricot tree on the lawn at the rear of his home, not thinking at the time of entering the new form of endurance competition himself.

Imagine his surprise, when he went up to inspect his handiwork yesterday, and found his pet kitten perched on the platform. Just how long little Tabby was aloft is not known, but she did not refuse to come down for a pan of milk refueling at supper time.

BRIDGE GIVES WAY; 52 KNOWN RIVER VICTIMS

TRAGEDY OCCURS AT COBLENZ, GERMANY, DURING BIG CELEBRATION

COBLENZ, Ger., July 23 (UP)—An official announcement today said 52 persons were known dead in the collapse of a condemned iron bridge during a Rhineland liberation celebration here last night.

Numerous other persons who had joined in the celebrations still were missing from their homes, the announcement said, and it was feared they, too, had been plunged into the Moselle river when the bridge fell.

Most of those who had been on the bridge were girls between the ages of 16 and 20, and many mothers who knew their daughters had come to Ehrenbreitstein to watch the fireworks went and wrung their hands as they watched the slow rescue work.

Only a few of the victims were men. Grief replaced the exaltation of the liberated territory as firemen dragged the deep waters for bodies.

It was believed more than 100 people had collected on the forbidden structure for a last glimpse of the brilliant fireworks, marking Coblenz's farewell to President Paul Von Hindenburg.

The bridge collapsed without warning near the end of a gala day in the Coblenz territory. A fireworks display was held in Ehrenbreitstein last evening to conclude the day's program.

As merry-makers walked homeward, many of them paused on the bridge for one last look.

Others, joined them until the old bridge, which long before had been closed to the public, broken under their weight and dropped them screaming into the river.

Judge Briggie's decision reversed that of master in chancery Frank L. Trutter who found Lewis and his associates guilty of contempt in violation of an injunction restraining him from interfering with the affairs of the "reorganized" U. M. W. of A., but recommended that they go unpunished on the grounds that it was a technical violation.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 23 (UP)—Negotiations looking toward settlement of state claims for gasoline tax which the Knickerbocker Oil Co., Hammond, allegedly evaded paying, were resumed today by Attorney Gen. James M. Ogden and State Auditor Archie N. Bobbitt.

MANY ENJOYED OLD MELODIES CONCERT HERE

PERFORMANCE TO BE REPEATED AT HIGH SCHOOL THIS EVENING

MANY FEATURE NUMBERS

Specialty Skits Add Much To Program Sponsored By Woman's Union Of Christian Church

The High School Auditorium was well filled Tuesday evening for the first performance of the Old Melodies Concert, which is being sponsored by the Woman's Union of The First Christian Church of Greencastle.

Everyone was delighted with the new decorations in the Auditorium. The program opened with a number in which about fifty children took part. This was followed by the presentation of the Girls of 1861, 1876, 1880, and 1930.

Two of the most interesting features were the Wedding of Josie and Mandy, and the Holland Dutch Kiddies. Other specialty numbers consisted of several selections by the well known Greencastle Kiwanis Male Quartette composed of Glen Lyon, O. W. Hollowell, Dr. John Egan and Marshall Abrams; a group of numbers by Jesse Beemer on his musical saw; a musical trio by Mrs. Ott, Mrs. Conrad and Miss Sackett; several numbers by The Old Time Fiddlers Harry Jones, Bert Smiley, Urban Elmore, Donald Jones, and Vernon Elmore; and the Dixie Steppers, Helmina Nelson and Dorris Long.

The Honey-Moon Skit in which Leot Mullins and Cully Price were featured was one of the big hits of the entire program.

The closing part of the program consisted of the Old Melodies Concert proper. The setting for this part of the program was a scene in the home of Mr. Lincoln in 1861. A group of friends had gathered for the evening, and one of the guests suggested an old time song.

Mrs. Bruner, who took the part of Mrs. Lincoln, presided a little old fashioned organ and the following soloists gave special numbers, accompanied by the entire group.

Mrs. Joe Crosby, Mrs. Cecil Shuey, Mrs. Ray Fisher, Mrs. C. W. Ott, Miss Alpha Williams, Mrs. O. J. Stewart, Cully Price, and Elmer Crawley Mr. Henry, who is directing the programs, led the group in the singing of a spirited old negro spiritual, also in an old fashioned dance.

R. I. Mullins took the part of Mr. Lincoln and Kimber Gardner and Mrs. Whit the parts of the negro servants in the home. The concert closed with the introduction of Uncle Tom, an negro, to the group by Mr. Lincoln.

Mr. Bruner took this part and sang Old Black Joe, and Old Kentucky Home. While the group sang the final chorus softly the old negro left the stage hobbling on his cane and wiping the tears from his eyes.

The program will be repeated Wednesday evening at eight o'clock with almost an entire change in specialty numbers. One of the features of the Wednesday evening program will be a male quartette from Rockville which recently took part in a similar program in that city.

The Old Melodies Concert will be the same as last night. Many who heard the program Tuesday evening pronounced it one of the most entertaining and best talent productions of recent years.

An interesting feature on Wednesday evening will be the presentation of ten prizes for the people present in the largest number of misspelled words in the printed programs. In many of the announcements in the programs words were intentionally misspelled and many people are searching for these.

BUSINESS IS TRANSACTED BY CITY COUNCIL

PURCHASE STREET ROLLER FROM HUBER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Tuesday evening, the city council purchased the new street roller from the Huber Manufacturing Company for a sum of $2,450. This action followed a committee report that the machine was now in satisfactory condition.

Purchase of the roller has been withheld for several weeks due to a slight defect in its construction.

All of the city officials were present for the meeting Tuesday night, including Mayor Denman, Councilman Gardner, Havens, Stewart, Lakin, Snider and Cherry; City Attorney Glen Lyon, and City Clerk Fred Snively.

A question of the license fees paid by the billiard hall operators in the city was raised by Councilman John Cherry. He stated that the pool room owners had been complaining about the high license fee they are paying and that they were asking some relief, especially since business is not so good as formerly.

Mr. Cherry moved that a fee of $50 for the first table and $10 each for the remaining tables be assessed pool room proprietors as a new license rate. The councilmen were unanimous in favoring the motion.

Further action along this line will be necessary and the new license fee will not go into effect until next year.

The question of a license fee for the miniature golf course, operated by Reocoe Hurst on east Washington street, was tabled until the next meeting.

The proposition of a fee to be paid by plumbers in the city was also discussed. The city attorney was instructed to see if there was an ordinance pertaining to this matter and report later.

Bernard Handy, of Handy's Sanitary Dairy, wants the council to continue Vine street north from Liberty to Jacob street, Attorney Lyon stated. According to Lyon, the plat of the city does not show a street at this location and that Handy wants to rebuild his plant and install new equipment. Consequently, he is interested in always having access to his plant and he wants to be sure the present thoroughfare past the dairy will not be closed at some time in the future. Further action in this matter will be taken by the council.

SOUTH ITALY HARD HIT BY EARTHQUAKE

VAST DAMAGE RESULTS FROM DISTURBANCE LAST MIDNIGHT REPORTS TODAY REVEAL

LOSS OF LIFE IS HEAVY

Property Destruction Hard To Estimate, As A Vast Area Is Covered In Loss.

NAPLES, Italy, July 23 (UP)—The widespread devastation left by an earthquake which rocked southern Italy shortly after midnight was revealed today in appalling reports of death and ruin from many cities. Reports received here until shortly before noon listed 270 persons dead and 618 injured in eight cities in middle southern Italy. One hundred were officially reported dead at Melfi, Capitanata district, where virtually the entire city was demolished.

The search for bodies continued there. Early incomplete death tolls in other cities most seriously affected by the earthquake were: Naples, 10; Ribolla, 20; Rio Nero, 11; Atella, 6; Mercato San Sezerio, 2; Buonalbergo, 3; and Osceola, 2.

Relief workers, hampered in Naples and in many other cities during the night's darkness by the absence of electric light, worked more rapidly with the coming of daybreak, removing the dead and injured from the debris. Rescue work still was in its early stages, however.

Alaldo Crollalanza, Italian minister of public works, hurried from Rome to supervise relief measures. He was at a watering place near Florence when the earthquake struck.

Under-Secretary of Public Works Leoni already was en route to the stricken area, Leoni and a group of engineers travelled aboard an emergency train which the Italian government recently prepared for such calamities as occurred today.

The train, it was announced, would attempt to reach Melfi, from where reports of most serious damage were received.

Premier Mussolini ordered Sen. Filippo Crenonesi, head of the Italian Red Cross, to organize relief for the stricken area immediately.

The quake struck Naples, 27 1/2 miles from the epicenter, at 1:06 a. m. Lightning, accompanied by heavy rumblings resembling thunder, preceded the first and most violent shock, which lasted 42 seconds. It was followed by two lighter and shorter shocks which drove inhabitants from their homes in terror.

"Hobo News" To List Routes Of Easiest Life

TRAMPS' HANDBOOK SOON WILL BE AVAILABLE TO BIG CIRCULATION

BIRMINGHAM, Eng., July 22 (UP)—The next issue of the "Hobo News" soon will be issued.

Jeremiah Boule, 56, weather-beaten and bronzed by many suns, is on a walking tour, now, getting material. The latest stock market quotations won't be printed. Neither will the unemployment figures.

Boule, after all, has his public to please and he is certain it isn't interested in stocks or work.

In the paper, however, will be included:

What towns to avoid.
Towns where police are lenient.
Homes guarded by fierce dogs.
Homes where "hand-outs" are freely given.

Harsh magistrates and bad jails.
All this, Boule insists, is of vital importance to his circulation. Although he has a college education and once occupied a comfortable position, this strange editor now is a hobo and argues he knows the pulse of his readers.

"In the olden days," he said, in explaining how the "Hobo News" was born, "tramps used to rely for their information on signs placed on gate stumps and at the entrances to towns, by men who had gone before them."

"That was unsatisfactory, for often these signs would be rubbed out, and I was constantly getting complaints from men who had struck bad patches in consequence."

"As I went about I used to gather information of all kinds and it struck me that it would be a good idea to pass it on in some way."

Boule said he found a friend who owned a printshop and the "Hobo News" was born.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION ON WHEAT AS GOOD HOG FEED

Wheat, properly fed, is unsurpassed as a fattening food for hogs. Wheat should be ground coarsely or cracked to give best results. The ground wheat may be fed dry in a self-feeder or made into slop. In either case, it should be supplemented with protein-rich feed like tankage, skim milk, or buttermilk.

Coarse-ground wheat and tankage in separate compartments of a self-feeder make a good fattening ration, and require a minimum of labor in feeding. Self-feeding is probably the best method of feeding dry ground wheat. Ground wheat fed in troughs should be moistened at feeding time to prevent wastage of the finer parts. Fine ground wheat, when fed dry, tends to form a pasty mass in the pig's mouth, and thereby interferes with appetite and digestion. Fine grinding of wheat should be avoided where dry feeding is practiced.

Soaking whole wheat is a poor substitute for grinding. However, soaked wheat is more valuable than dry whole wheat in the hog ration. When fed dry, more of the whole wheat escapes digestion. Very few feeding tests have been made to compare dry whole wheat and soaked whole wheat. The results of these tests, however, indicate that soaking wheat increases its feeding value about 5 per cent. More extensive feeding tests show that grinding wheat increases the feeding value approximately 20 per cent.

A ration of 74 pounds of coarse-ground corn, 25 pounds of coarse-ground wheat and 10 pounds of tankage is splendid for either nursing or weaning pigs. If ground oats and ground wheat are mixed and fed to either pigs or fattening hogs, the oats may be included for breeding hogs. Feeding experiments have shown that there is no appreciable advantage in combining wheat and corn for fattening hogs. Apparently combinations of wheat and tankage are slightly less efficient than wheat, but more efficient than corn and tankage. Pound for pound, good quality ground wheat has approximately 5 per cent more fattening value than No. 3 corn.

When the price of a bushel of good quality ground wheat is not more than 10 per cent above the price of a bushel of No. 3 corn, the wheat is the cheapest feed. Calculations based on feeding values show that when corn is selling at 60 cents a bushel, ground wheat is worth 90 cents. When the price of corn reaches $1.00, a bushel Digestive troubles due to feeding of ground wheat is worth $1.13. wheat are uncommon in hogs. When in doubt about feeding wheat, the best single rule to remember is that corn and coarse-ground or cracked wheat are interchangeable in most hog rations.

NO FRENCH COOKING FOR HIM
MUNCIE, Ind., July 23 (UP)—Charley Murray, film comedian, said while in Muncie for a short visit with his brothers, Carver and Asher Murray, that he does not like French cooking.

Accompanied by his wife, their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs.

William McQuaid, Murray toured a portion of Europe this season. He said he found a ham and egg cage in London and did most of his eating there.

He said he found French cooking the vogue not only in Paris, but in other European countries, even in England.

While in England, the Murray party visited Stratford-on-Avon, birthplace of William Shakespeare at the same time a group of 1,500 American students were there, several of them being from Indiana university.

FARM BUREAU IS COMMITTED TO NEW CONSTITUTION

The Indiana Farm Bureau delegate body in convention assembled in Indianapolis in November, 1929, went on record in favor of a new constitution for Indiana. The current issue of the Hoosier Farmer, official publication, carries an article entitled "The New Constitution Movement" written by Ross F. Lockridge of Bloomington, which sets forth the various reasons why the farm bureau and other organizations in Indiana representing large masses of the citizenry are seeking to bring about a favorable vote on the referendum for a constitutional convention which will come before the people at the coming fall election.

Some of the important features that need to be revised according to the author of the article include, taxation, city government, court and legislative reform, suffrage and elections, education and social justice. It is brought out that our state constitution is restrictive and sadly out of date as to modern means of improvement in all of these basic fields. Mr. Lockridge says: "In the middle of the nineteenth century the bulk of our wealth was in the form of tangible property easily found and easily assessed. There were sixty-two farmers in the convention that wrote our present constitution and they helped to frame a general property tax suited to that day. Certainly they had no thought of imposing such an unjust share of the burdens of taxation as now rests upon farmers who are the principal owners of tangible wealth, which constitutes but a minor portion of our general wealth. It is taxed to the limit whereas intangible property hides out and escapes taxation under the present system."

It is brought out in the article that although Indiana has had only two constitutional conventions, New York had had seven, Louisiana seven, Massachusetts four, Michigan six, New Hampshire seven, Ohio four, Virginia five, Vermont ten and many other states three and four. The state farm bureau officials are carrying the movement into the county units through local meetings of members.

VONCASTLE

Marion Davies in Hilarious Comedy Role "Not So Dumb—Tonight"

"Not So Dumb," an all-talking adaptation of the successful stage comedy, "Dulcy," directed by King Vidor with Marion Davies as the star and with a supporting cast which includes Elliott Nugent, Raymond Hackett, Julia Faye, Sally Starr and Donald Ogden Stewart, will play on Thursday and Friday at the Voncastle Theatre.

The George S. Kaufman-Marc Connelly farce, which ran a full season at the Frazee Theatre, New York, and later was a hit throughout the country, is believed to be a particularly happy choice as a vehicle for Miss Davies, who is known as one of the most humorous individuals of the Hollywood colony, both on and off screen.

The plot concerns a young woman, more beautiful than she is wise, whose every good intention results in a blunder. Those who have seen Miss Davies in her last two comedies, "The Patsy" and "Show People," will understand her fitness for just such a characterization.

One of the most hilarious scenes in the comedy is that in which the guests play bridge. In this episode, Miss Davies sounds a warning note to women bridge-partners who try to outbid, out-trump and out-talk everyone else. This scene, which Vidor filmed with intimate detail, attains a high mark in comedy and will be particularly intriguing to those who enjoy burlesques of everyday happenings.

"Not So Dumb," was filmed almost entirely indoors, but it opens with a novel shot showing Miss Davies and Nugent in a violent argument while speeding in a roadster.

Tonight "Murder Will Out" starring Jack Mulhall and Lila Lee, will have its final showings.

Added short subjects to both programs afford pleasing variety.

CHAPTER XV

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE: Armand de Beaufort, a lieutenant in Napoleon's Old Guard, is caught by the Royalists when he plots to have the Emperor released from Elba. He escapes the firing squad and takes refuge with his friend, the Countess Louise, who allows him to disguise himself as her footman. When Louise de Beaufort, a young cousin of the countess, comes to visit her, Armand falls in love with her. His position as footman makes it hard for him to woo her, so he is seen as an ardent Royalist. He does not dare to disclose his true identity. On the morning that Lucien de Grignon, King's Commissioner for the district, proposes to Louise by letter, she and Armand go riding. In the woods, Armand meets Louise to her and she allows him to kiss her. When they return to Grignon is waiting for Louise, but she cannot face him after the scene with Armand in the mountains and runs away from him. De Grignon, however, has recognized Armand as an escaped Royalist.

"Leonie!" he whispered. There was no answer.
 "I know you're there," he continued, knocking gently all the while. "Won't you open the door? I must speak to you. I've got so much to tell you. I'm leaving—I may never see you again. Let me see you to say good-bye."

He broke off in exasperation. There was no answer.
 "Leonie," he said, "the things I have to say to you cannot be said through a closed door. I beg of you, just one moment face to face."

There was no answer.
 "All right," he said finally. "Are you listening? Well, I'm going to tell you whether you like it or not, whether you are listening or not. I love you. I've loved you since the first moment I saw you. I'll love you until the last moment I live. You can't send such a love away from you without a word. Don't you love me, Leonie? If you love me the least bit—open the door."

On the other side of the door, Leonie stood, desperately trying to control herself. Several times her hand reached for the doorknob. Every time she drew it back. Tears were streaming down her face, and it was only with effort that she could prevent her sobs from being audible.

Very softly through the closed door she could hear Armand's whisper.
 "Then there's nothing more to say. I'm going now—my dearest one—good-bye."
 Leonie's hand went toward the knob again. But already she could hear his footsteps going down the hall. She turned back into the room and stood listening while Leonie played his song.

 "How can you be so charming, so charming."
 "When you're breaking my heart in two."
 With sudden resolution Armand dropped his horse's reins and started running back to the chateau. Thick vines grew on the wall, and in an instant Armand judged that these were strong enough to use as a ladder by which to ascend to Leonie's balcony. Hand over hand he drew himself up until he was half way over the broad railing of the balcony. Here he paused and listened intently while Leonie went on singing his song, a tear in the sound of every note.

Finally Leonie could bear no more the thoughts invoked by the tender song she was singing. Her playing and her singing stopped suddenly and she began to sob. Very softly, very tenderly, Armand took up the melody from where she had left off. Leonie straightened up; joy, surprise, fear, doubt, and deep emotion depicted on her face.

When Armand brought the song to its conclusion she had made up her mind. Her step was steady as she walked quickly to the balcony where Armand stood. Firmly she stepped out into the moonlight and into his arms. He pressed her to his breast in a long embrace, raising kisses or her upturned face. Her arms encircled his neck in full surrender.
 "No matter who you are, I love you. I will always love you," she said.

Armand pressed her to his breast again. Their lips met in a long kiss.

"I love you. No matter who you are I love you," Leonie whispered, and sinking down beside her spinning wheel her hand and wept as if her heart would break.

"Why was I born a De Beaufort and he only a footman?" was the cruel question that was stamped upon her heart in that moment of farewell.

As Armand went down the stairs he met Louise. There were tears in her eyes.
 "You hear?" Armand asked.
 The Countess nodded.

"Not what one would call a brilliant success," Armand said ruefully.
 "Not exactly," the countess answered. "Armand, what happened on the ride this morning?"
 "Ask Leonie—let her tell you," Armand answered.

There was an awkward pause and then Armand remarked, with the idea of taking his leave. "Well, I'll get my horse ready."
 He took Louise in his arms and kissed her. Then, holding her off at arm's length, he said, "Give that to Leonie and tell her that I love her."

As Armand released her and turned quickly away, Louise stood silently for a moment, a little hurt at Armand's unceremonious departure. As he reached the door, however, Armand turned around and exclaimed, "What was I thinking of? Imagine my forgetting to say good-bye to the best friend I have in the world."

He took her in his arms in a big, warm hug. Louise's eyes were misted with tears when he let her go.
 "Good-bye—Armand," she said tenderly as he went out of the door.
 A few moments later Armand was leading his horse out of the courtyard. He had taken off his livery and was again in the suit that the kindly Bonapartist tailor had given him after he had escaped from the cuirassiers at Grenoble.

At the arched gate that led into the inner courtyard, Armand gathered the reins in his hand and prepared to mount. His foot was already in the stirrup, and he had turned for a last glance at Leonie's lighted window, when suddenly a single note of music, like a bird taking wing, floated out from the open window. Leonie was playing on her spinnet. One foot still in the stirrup, Armand listened gravely until she had played a whole bar through. A joyous grin spread over his face. He took his foot from the suddenly from the courtyard a woman's scream echoed shrilly and then ceased, as though a hand had been clapped over her mouth. The lovers sprang apart in surprise. Armand bent quickly over the balcony, scanning the courtyard. He could see nothing. Then, Leonie whispered, "Look!"

Armand's eyes followed her outstretched hand. On the further wall of the courtyard, outlined by the light from the window behind them, were the gigantic, moving shadows of a file of soldiers. From the shape of their helmets Armand recognized them as Royalist cuirassiers.

"Quiet—inside!" he whispered fiercely, and taking Leonie by the arm, almost pushed her into the room. With a single movement he shut the casement window.
 Leonie looked at him in puzzled bewilderment.
 "Put out that light!" he said, pointing to a sconce full of candles that stood on the spinnet.
 Leonie did not move. She was frozen in surprise and increasing wonder. Armand put out the candles himself.

In the semi-darkness of the room, Leonie faced him. "What is it—what is the matter?"
 Armand who was now listening intently at the bolted door of the room said tersely, "Soldiers!"

"What are they here for?" she asked.
 Armand, still intent upon the sounds in the hallway, answered, "For me. It looks as if they'd got me. They've surrounded the chateau."

Leonie's eyes widened with terror. Was it possible that this man to whom she had just confessed her love was some desperado, thief or villain?

Growing horror was in her voice when she asked:
 "Who are you?"
 Armand opened his mouth to reply, but from outside the door came De Grignon's heavy voice. It was from him that Leonie had her answer.
 "Armand de Treville—surrender!" he said.

Leonie sank back against the wall in dread and beating.
 "Open in the King's name!" De Grignon ordered.

At the barracks in Grenoble, De Grignon, still hot and flushed from his ride, was examining the circular which he had issued shortly after Armand de Treville's escape from the firing squad. His fore-finger followed the lines beneath a rough, wood-cut portrait of Armand in Napoleon's uniform.
 He read:
 "Height—five feet nine inches. Weight—one hundred and sixty pounds. Hair—dark. Eyes—dark. Speaks with a decided Gascon accent."
 De Grignon turned and looked at the orderly officer who was looking over his shoulder. De Grignon ordered, "Aha!" he said. "Speaks with a decided Gascon accent? This is our man. I'm sure of it. I only wonder how it was that he managed to fool the Countess Louise. She's a firm Royalist. If I'd been positive that it was he, I would have taken him single-handed."
 The officer, who was the same Cuirassier captain that had had an encounter with Armand at the inn at Grenoble, felt the back of his head, where a dimming lump gave mute testimony of Armand's prowess, and then gave De Grignon a dubious look.
 But, he answered De Grignon respectfully enough, saying, "Yes, Commissioner."
 "Take twenty men and proceed to the chateau," De Grignon ordered.
 The officer saluted and turned on his heel. De Grignon called him back.
 "Wait! There must be no mistake this time. I will take command."
 Again the officer saluted, turned sharply on his heel and walked out of the office. Outside De Grignon could hear his commands:
 "Sergeant Pascal. Twenty men in the saddle—quickly!"
 A moment later, the staccato notes of "Boots and Saddles" echoed through the barracks.
 As the cuirassiers mounted and rode out of the barracks yard with De Grignon at their head, Armand was knocking on the door of Leonie's room. He held a tray in his hand, and on it were some fishes and some folded napkins.
 "Mademoiselle," he said, knocking gently, "your dinner!"
 There was no answer. He knocked again. Still no answer. There had been no answer at luncheon. He had left the tray outside her door. In the middle of the afternoon he had come and taken it away again. She had not touched it. Now she would not eat her dinner, Armand was worried.
 With whimsical tenderness he whispered through the closed door, "I ate your lunch, so that Madame the Countess wouldn't worry. Must I eat your dinner too?"
 He would have persisted in his attempt to get Leonie to eat her supper, but the faint whistling of a bar of the Old Guard song attracted his attention. It must be Coquard, come with orders for him. He set the tray down carefully before Leonie's door and ran down into the courtyard. Coquard was sitting on his horse in the gateway.
 "Great news," he called to Armand as he came running up. "The Emperor has landed at Cannes."
 "At last!" Armand said joyfully.
 "De Brissac brought the news," Coquard went on. "I've spread it throughout the valley. You are to meet a detachment of the Old Guard at the mountain pass two leagues from here at mid-night and march on straight to Grenoble. Ney's army has joined Napoleon and we can capture Grenoble easily."
 "Splendid!" Armand said.
 "Au revoir!" Coquard answered, whirling his horse about, and galloping off into the night.
 Armand turned back into the house with a light heart. As he started up the stairs, hardly conscious in his joy, of where he was going, the countess Louise called to him:
 "Charles! Where on earth are you going?"
 Armand turned to her with a broad smile.
 "Louise," he said, "I was looking for you. The Emperor has returned."
 "Impossible!"
 "It's true—I'm leaving."
 He started up the stairs again.
 "Where are you going?" Louise asked.
 "I must say goodbye to Leonie."
 The Countess watched him run up the stairs, her expression showing a little surprise, a little hurt.
 At Leonie's door Armand paused and knocked softly.

Will Leonie betray Armand again, now that she has learned to love him? Here he does not know. Read tomorrow's installment.

sible to determine until the mysterious being prepared beyond the guarded doors of the haute couture have been disclosed during the last week in July and the first week of August.

Evening dresses here as well as in Paris are frankly long. The instep is the stopping place of the smartest skirts, and many of these are longer at the back. One has taken the longer skirt edict less literally before six. Day dresses are lengthening gradually, but enough to make added yardage necessary and to worry the manufacturer who is striving to maintain something like his former price standard.

In all early fall collections viewed to date, one finds an acknowledgement of the longer skirt, the natural raised neckline. One finds also a tendency to do diverse amusing things to the sleeves, amusing this is if one can view full sleeves in that light. One's sense of humor is apt to stagger at the prospect of leg o' mutton sleeves, a threatened type and one which of course makes further inroads in the material at hand. Whether the "puff sleeve" is going to be a phantom or a reality, sleeves are rebelling against their present fate, and are up to any sort of trickery to get themselves talked about and admired.

What with a general feeling for luxurious fabrics used without stint, a feeling for individualized lines and an insistence on intricate cut and workmanship it may well be that these things will add materially to the cost of being well dressed this autumn. Cutting the garment according to the cloth is surely going to mean buying more cloth by several yards.

Tariff Rules Cause Spanish Trade Protest

COMMERCIAL BODIES DEMAND ABOGATION OF MODUS VIVIENDI

MADRID, July 23 (UP)—Although there is an insistent demand among various commercial and trade bodies that Spain abrogate its existent modus vivendi with the United States, there is little possibility of the present government taking such a step.

As soon as President Hoover signed the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Law, the government appointed a committee comprised of employees and experts of the Ministry of State and the Ministry of National Economy to consider the requests of Spanish business men. The committee deemed that the modus vivendi should be abrogated, but on account of the tariff which is particularly hard on Spanish products—especially manufactured cork—on account of the other restrictive measures which the United States has adopted, in connection with the so-called Mediterranean fruit fly, not to mention the loss of business which the 18th Amendment caused.

Now that the report has been made, however, there is little chance of anything being done about it. The Berenguer government is more and more showing a tendency to postpone the solution of such problems to the time when Spain shall return to Parliamentary government, and it would hardly care to risk the responsibility of denouncing the 1906 treaty, but would much better prefer to have a government chosen by the nation to handle such an important question.

The clearest indication that nothing will be done for the time being, however, can be derived from the fact that during the last week of use the Duke of Alba, Minister of State, departed for a relatively long tour of France, England, and Switzerland, and upon his return to Spain he intends to remain in the summer resorts of the North Coast.

The only witness reported that five or six persons appeared to have been riding in the automobile when it whisked past him on the bridge just before plunging into the river.
